Foreword

The Zimbabwe Election Support Network (ZESN), is a network of 38 independent, non-partisan, non-governmental organizations promoting democratic elections in Zimbabwe. It has been observing all aspects of elections since its inception in 2000. ZESN utilizes the Southern African Development Community (SADC) Principles and Guidelines Governing the Conduct of Democratic Elections as the yardstick to measure the conduct of an election.

The democratization process in Africa in general and Zimbabwe in particular has taken a long winding road that has resulted in electoral outcomes that have been at best acknowledged and at worst condemned. The oscillating executive decisions on the conduct of elections in respective countries have resulted in Africa being labeled emerging democracies even where the country in particular attained independence three decades ago. Democracy has been associated with elections and yet it is in danger of authoritarian manipulation. Historically, elections have been an instrument of authoritarian control as well as a means of democratic governance.

The relative importance of elections in the democratization process is key in that the success of any democracy depends primarily on the conduct of participatory, competitive politics particularly free and fair elections that render legitimacy to the incumbent. However, elections in themselves are not sufficient to ensure democracy because even military juntas also hold elections to try and buy legitimacy from their victims.

Electoral experiences, especially in Africa suggest their potential double-edged nature. On one hand by organizing periodic elections, governments create some semblance of democratic legitimacy and at the same time by placing those elections under tight authoritarian controls they try to cement their continued hold on power. Their dream is to reap the fruits of electoral legitimacy without running the risks of democratic uncertainty. Balancing between electoral control and electoral credibility, governments situate themselves in a nebulous zone of structural ambivalence.

ZESN however, believes the democratization road must start with inclusive, participatory, free and fair elections. It also believes that elections form a fundamental value upon which democracy can lay its solid foundation. The fundamental concept that electoral reform will ultimately lead to broader political and economic reform is critical. The idea that electoralism alone suffices is fast losing ground as the modern thinking denotes that it should be in tandem with the respect for human freedoms and choices, contestation and participation which ultimately leads to legitimacy.

The March 27, 2008 harmonized election was relatively calm with less incidents of political violence. The polling processes were generally smooth without serious problems. The period leading to the run off witnessed a dramatic down ward shift election in terms of election environment, processes and management which resulted in the election being condemned by regional member states as well as local civil society organisations and individuals, which ultimately led to a contested election.

ZESN's vision is a Zimbabwe where democratic electoral environment and processes are upheld. This vision can only be realized where the political environment is conducive for holding free and fair elections, where citizens are free to form, join and support conflicting parties, candidates and policies, where they can choose from available alternatives through access to alternative sources of information. Democratic elections can only take place where equal rights of participation are accorded to all full members of a political community and where they are free to express their electoral preferences. Reserved positions, the politics of exclusion, violence and intimidation, repression of civil liberties, unfair access to the media, coercion and fraud as well as preventing elected officials from taking offices or concluding their terms of office are all political machinations that reverse democracy and ultimately development. It is believed that electoral reforms recommended by ZESN in this report will assist the country in fastening the pace of democratization.

Acknowledgements

ZESN would like to express its profound gratitude to its board that has worked tirelessly to ensure that the organization is guided by prudent policies and regulations and for their promptness in dealing with emerging crises which were in abundance in the run-up, during and after the 2008 harmonized election. Our heart-felt gratitude goes to the National and Provincial Task force members who worked flat out months before and after the election to ensure the smooth implementation of election observation. We would also like to express our appreciation to Long Term Observers and community Educators who worked under very trying and risky times to ensure that the organization receives accurate, verified and up-to date information on political developments during and after the election. We appreciate the role played by Short Term Observers and drivers who risked their lives by observing the harmonized election the Presidential run-off. We are eternally grateful to our development partners who ensured that our dreams are realized and who were flexible given the political environment that obtained in Zimbabwe. Our appreciation goes to ZESN Secretariat for their hard work, efficiency and effectiveness in managing all the programmes. We express our deepest sadness to our ZESN Observer Elliot Machipisa who was killed in cold blood in Hurungwe for his desire and dream to see a democratic Zimbabwe. He left behind a wife and two daughters aged six and eight. Last but definitely not the least we appreciate and congratulate every voter on the Zimbabwe voters roll who exercise their right to choose in every election. We all hope that the electoral reforms recommended by ZESN if adopted would lead to a more democratic state.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

While the 29 March Harmonized Election and 27 the June Presidential Run Off have come and gone, they are poised to leave an indelible imprint in Zimbabwe's post independence electoral history. The limelight and controversy they generated within regional and global contexts have no local electoral parallels save those witnessed during the legendary 1980 Independence Election.

They set in motion a chain of events which if not urgently addressed are set to see the current socio-economic meltdown in the country worsening to unprecedented levels. For the first time in its history, Zimbabwe went for almost half a year without a popularly elected Government in place, for that matter at a time when bold decisions were needed to bail out the country from its socio-economic meltdown.

Controversial as they were, the elections marked a significant departure from past electoral experiences. For the first time since independence in 1980, Zimbabwe conducted four elections rolled in one, hence "harmonized" elections. Until 2005, presidential and parliamentary elections were held separately with presidential elections after every five years and parliamentary elections after every six years.

In contrast to the overly restrictive electoral frameworks under which past elections were conducted, the 29 March and 27 June Elections were conducted under a visibly reconstituted electoral framework following the Electoral Laws Amendment Act [2008] and amendments to POSA, AIPPA and the Public Broadcasting Act.

Also, votes were to be counted at polling stations, presiding officers obliged to record them on Return Forms [VfIs] and post them outside polling stations before submitting them to constituency centers, electoral changes that visibly enhanced transparency and accountability in the counting and tabulation of election results.

Equally instructive is to note that while in past elections a presidential candidate with the highest number of votes, even if below 50% of the total vote cast would be eligible for presidency, the 29 March's new electoral dispensation mandated the presidential candidate to meet a stipulated 50% + 1 vote. Also unlike in previous elections, the electoral framework explicitly provided for a run-off and also outlined the specific frameworks that will apply in the event of this scenario, thus attaching a precautionary measure never attached before to any election.

The electoral administrative framework was also reconstituted with the dissolution and placing of the functions initially undertaken by the Delimitation Commission, the Electoral Supervisory Commission under the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission with the Registrar-General of Elections and the Election Directorate directly under it. However, as shown in the section below, the electoral framework is still fraught with several gaps, in need of urgent intervention.

While the run up to the 29 March Harmonized Elections and the polling day itself were relatively calm, post poll scenarios cast an incomparable trend. For the first time in the nation's post independence electoral history, the electorate had to contend with an anxiety-laden six-week delay in the release of the presidential poll.

The delay was so unprecedented that the regional body, SADC, was galvanized into convening an emergency meeting in Lusaka [Zambia] to drum up pressure for the release of presidential results in Zimbabwe. As if this delay was not nerve-racking enough, the Zimbabwean voter was in for yet another electoral first when ZEC, the body tasked for the overall management of elections, ordered a recount of results in 23 constituencies before the release of the presidential poll, a decision that generated animated debates and speculations within and across the globe.

When the results were finally released on 2 May 2008, it took almost two weeks to have the run-off date announced on 15 May 2008 during which the run up to the run off degenerated into a run over leaving in its wake a trail of destruction, houses burnt down, many people displaced and homeless, many children orphaned, and community relations torn asunder. Freedom of assembly and movement were heavily restricted with rural areas virtually sealed off from opposition rallies, the opposition leadership subjected to sporadic arrests and detentions, their campaign activities under total blackout on national electronic and press media. Hate speech, incitement of violence, and threats of war characterized electoral campaigns, with the ruling party presidential candidate threatening to go back to war if he lost the election to the MDC presidential candidate, whom he considered a puppet of the West.

The intensity with which this retributive violence was perpetrated was so shocking that a week to the 27 June run-off saw Thabo Mbeki, the South African President making spirited effort to cancel the run-off, urging ZANU PF and the MDC to bury their hatchets and start negotiating for a Government of National Unity [GNU], a suggestion which however did not carry the day as Zimbabwe defiantly went ahead with the Election. Calls for the cancellation of the run off were also echoed by African luminaries such as Nelson Mandela, Desmond Tutu and Kofi Annan, as well as from the UN Secretary General, Britain and United States of America.

On 21 June 2008, the MDC presidential aspirant withdrew from the race alleging gross retributive state violence against his supporters, a development that relegated the election to a one-horse run off.

The Polling Day was characterized by poor voter turnout in urban areas, an extraordinarily high number of spoilt ballots [39 975 in the March Election against 131 481 in the June Election] with a significant number reportedly carrying insulting messages, an unusually high number of assisted voters, and recording of serial numbers, incidents that point to a banal breach of voter rights and secrecy. In most rural constituencies, voters were reportedly herded to polling stations by traditional leaders, instructed to vote for the ruling party candidate and also ordered to record their ballot papers' serial numbers and after polling give them to the local leaders. Soldiers and police presence was reportedly heavy such that in some cases their presence reportedly overshadowed that of voters.

In stark contrast to the six week delay that accompanied the release of the 29 March elections, the 27 June results were speedily released and within 24 hours, the winner had been sworn in as President of Zimbabwe at a function whose regional and international presence however least resembled past experiences.

The 27 June "run-off" received round condemnation in both process and outcome with a number of countries such as Botswana, Zambia, Britain and the United States openly declaring their rejection of the elections, terms such as “farce” and “sham” generally used to characterize it. The Government of Botswana openly called for the expulsion of Zimbabwe from the SADC and the AU while the African National Congress youth league Chairman Julius Malema called the run off “a joke of the worst order”.

Reports by the Pan African Parliament Observer Team, the African Union Observer Mission, the Botswana Observer Team, and the SADC Election Observer Mission [SEOM] Preliminary Report also roundly condemned the election process and outcome as generally “not giving rise to the conduct of free, fair and credible elections”, “falling short of accepted AU standards”, “not representing the will of the people of Zimbabwe”, “not conforming to SADC Principles and Guidelines Governing Democratic Elections”, among other characterizations. The Group of Eminent African leaders that include Nelson Mandela also expressed visible disquiet on the conduct of elections, generally describing the election as illegitimate and in fact a dark patchy in Africa’s electoral history.

Observed Electoral Gaps and the way forward

Such a highly agitated electoral environment hardly suffices for free and fair elections. The two political parties must engage in power-sharing talks in order to find a lasting solution to the political impasse. Such dialogues should however be guided by the “will of the people” as anything short of that constitutes a truce and not a permanent settlement. The message of zero tolerance to political violence must also cascade from the top leadership structures to the grassroots, with political leaders publicly denouncing political violence in both words and action.

While Zimbabwe continues to conduct its elections within the Westminster system of first past the post [FPTP] based on the “winner- take-all” model, the solution to the political stalemate in Zimbabwe lies in an electoral paradigmatic shift to more inclusive, accommodating, win-win electoral systems based on proportional representation [for Senate] and Mixed Electoral Models [for the Lower House].

On voter registration and inspection of the Voters’ Roll, it was noted with concern that the exercise started late with little time allocated for voter registration and inspection; that the voters roll is not up to date and that the problem of ghost voters remains a problem and that in some cases, insufficient and incorrect information was provided to citizens about the registration process. Voter registration must be approached as an ongoing process, stringent requirements which discourage people from registering as voters must be done away with, and that the voter registration exercise be sufficiently publicized to ensure maximum voter participation.

While the Electoral Act obliges ZEC to conduct voter education it was disturbing to note that voter education started late and in some cases with reports of “little voter education” having been conducted by ZEC by the time of elections. ZEC should be availed with adequate resources for voter education and that adequate monitoring mechanisms should be put in place to ensure that voter education is conducted in a uniform, professional and non-partisan manner. ZEC should also provide more space to NGOs to provide gap filling voter education.

Although ZEC now has direct responsibility over the delimitation exercise, its management of the delimitation process was far from satisfactory. Insufficient time was allowed for people and parliamentarians to participate in the process. The final Delimitation Report was tabled in Parliament very late in the electoral process leaving little time to educate the public on changes to boundaries [ward and constituencies]. Delays in the finalization of the delimitation exercise resulted in voter registration and inspections being done before the exercise leading to costly re-runs of primaries in several constituencies. ZEC must be obliged to give public notice before embarking on a delimitation exercise and "so far as is practicable within the time available" entertain representations from political parties and other interested parties who are likely to be affected by it

While the nomination exercises were largely transparent, it was noted with concern that some nomination papers were in some cases rejected or disqualified on the basis of avoidable reasons such as inadequate papers, candidates being nominated by persons who are not registered as voters and in some cases prospective candidates' names not appearing on the voters' roll. To avoid such unnecessary rejections of nomination papers, prospective candidates should ensure that their papers are in order well in advance. Information on ward and constituency boundaries should also be timely availed so that nominees are identified from the correct wards.

While in the run up to the 29 March Election there was visible effort to accord some reasonable access to the media to all political parties, it was distressing to note that in the run up to the run-off the state media prominently featured ruling party political advertisements and messages to the total exclusion of MDC T. In those few instances where reference was made to the MDC T, the messages were ZANU PF sponsored and intended to disparage, de-campaign and discredit the opposition candidate in all forms. Ideally before the next elections in Zimbabwe, more broadcasters [independent radio and television stations] should be allowed to start operating so that the public can receive a greater diversity of information and viewpoints. The Electoral Commission should also be more proactive in its monitoring of public broadcasters during the election period to ensure that they observe these provisions.

Accreditation of local and international observers is too restricted. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Justice still wield veto powers on which groups should be accredited. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission must have the decisive say on which observers to accredit without any ministerial veto power as is currently the case. ZEC should also accredit sufficient numbers of local and international observers to allow comprehensive observation of elections and at the same time guaranteeing the security of independent and domestic election observers.

Postal voting in Zimbabwe remains controversial, shrouded in secrecy and inaccessible to observers. It is strongly recommended that the doctrine of secrecy that is applied to other electoral processes must also apply to postal voting. The Electoral Commission should also be given the power to establish a system that allows Zimbabweans living outside the country [diaspora voters] to vote by post if they are unable to return to Zimbabwe to cast their votes. On the issue of voting of assisted voters, it is noted with deep concern that reports of literate voters being forced to profess illiteracy and seek Assisted Voter status continue to be received. Measures must be promptly put in place to stop this abuse. The secrecy of their ballot is also questionable. To safeguard the secrecy of their ballot and also avoid intimidation and possible future retribution, they should be assisted to vote by a trusted friend or relative.

The partisan role of the police, army and prison officers remains a major electoral concern. Cases where acts of violence have been committed either directly by state services or in their full view have also been fully documented. Security forces should conduct themselves in a professional and non-partisan manner and should not serve the interests of individual political parties. While the presence of police officers at polling stations is to maintain order, deployment of large numbers of security forces at polling stations could lead to voter intimidation.

Also disturbing is the growing partisan role of traditional leadership in politics. Reports of traditional leaders who were actively involved in political campaigns, campaigning for the ruling party, threatening known or suspected opposition supporters with eviction from their fiefdoms or, ordering opposition supporters facing threats of eviction to pay a fine of an ox in order to be forgiven were widespread. Such practices are in total breach of their traditional god-fatherly role in their communities. Traditional leaders must remain apolitical, embracing all their subjects regardless of their political persuasion and allowing their subjects to exercise their freedom of choice and association.

The Electoral Court is not well capacitated to hear and make timely resolutions to all election-related appeals within six months of the date of their submission with most pre-election petitions finally cleared after elections. For the Electoral Court to resolve disputes expeditiously before the election takes place there is need for competent, effective, independent and impartial Judiciary and electoral institutions. There is also need to complement the judges of the Electoral Court with staff, equipment and adequate resources.

Sound election administration is critical in building political party confidence in the conduct of elections. However ZEC's management of the delimitation, nomination, voter education, voter registration and inspection processes and release of the 29 March presidential results was cause for concern. ZEC's neutrality and ability to work without being influenced by political parties is highly suspect yet such impartiality and autonomy is needed to enlist the confidence of the electorate, political parties, and civic society. ZESN therefore recommends that an independent and more professional, all-inclusive, accountable and politically independent Election Management Body be established to run elections. The Body should be appointed with the participation of opposition parties and key stakeholders. Such a Body should be financed from the Consolidated Fund with its accountability to parliament and not to the Minister or President which is currently the case.

The Political Impasse

To resolve the political impasse that has been dogging Zimbabwe since the emergence of the MDC in 2000, the political leadership of the main political parties urgently engage in hard talk and "will of the people" driven power sharing talks drawing lessons similar experiences in other countries.

However, promising as it is, power-sharing is no stroll in a garden park. Finding a solution to the Zimbabwe crisis is not going to be easy given the tangent stance of the main political actors. How far each of the principals is prepared to climb down from their positions and how far the mediator will manage the process will be decisive in determining either the collapse or the success of the negotiations.

Particular sticky issues are the basis of the proposed power-sharing. Is the basis the 27 June poll or 29 March poll results? This question is particularly burning given that both contenders have hard-line positions on this sticky issue. How the mediator will handle this tricky question without shortchanging the will of the people will prove a test case of his mediation management capacity.

Also imperative is the need to agree on who will head the proposed power-sharing arrangement? Who will wield executive/ceremonial powers? How are ministerial responsibilities to be shared? How is the issue of violence to be addressed? Is the arrangement a transition to elections or an end in itself? These questions are particularly tricky given the ideological and personality differences and mistrust between the two main political actors. Against this background ZESN and all peace loving citizens fervently hope that the traditional obstacles that have been standing in the way of the SADC-brokered talks since 2004 will be kept at bay.

When all is said and done, the 27 Presidential Run Off in Zimbabwe was a sad story of an election without democracy. This election experience suggests that while the idea of democracy is intimately linked to elections, in practice the two do not necessarily add up. Even undemocratic regimes hold periodic elections in order to give some semblance of democratic legitimacy.

CHAPTER ONE HISTORICAL AND POLITICAL BACKGROUND OF ELECTIONS

Historical Background

Elections do not occur in social vacuum. They take place within specific historical and political contexts. Unfolding historical and political developments directly and indirectly influence the electoral processes of the country. In fact, they constitute the macro environmental contexts within which elections are conducted.

Political and historical contexts define the play field, determine the rules and the play of the game as well as the policy issues that inform and underpin election campaigns. Electoral processes and practices at a given time, mirror political scenarios aground. Where the political climate is tense, agitated, and polarized, election campaigns have generally been marred with violence. Understanding of the politics and history of the country is therefore critical in unraveling the political behavior of election contenders.

Also instructive to note is that the liberation struggle was a protracted search for the right to majority enfranchisement, a basic citizen democratic right that is exercised through periodic elections. Periodic elections not only allow citizen participation in political processes but also allow the country's citizens to define their socio-economic destiny by choosing a government of their choice. A freely exercised vote therefore expresses the political will of the people in a given country. The 1980 Election undertaken within the framework of the 1979 Lancaster House Constitution provided Zimbabwe's eight million black majority citizens with the first experience to exercise their political right of enfranchisement. The 1980 Election therefore symbolizes a departure from exclusionary politics.

Through that first election, monitored and observed by the regional and global community, black Zimbabweans expressed their collective will through the ballot box, a political will that led to the first government of Zimbabwe, a Government of National Unity [GNU] comprising ZANU [with 57 parliamentary seats], ZAPU [with 20 parliamentary seats], UANC [with 3 parliamentary seats] with 20 parliamentary seats [constitutionally reserved for Whites until 1987 in the Lancaster Constitution. In this case, a GNU that is based on the vote [will of the people] is not a novelty in Zimbabwe.

Since 1980, elections have been a very visible feature of post independence politics in Zimbabwe, hence the 1985 Election, the 1990 Election, the 1995 Election, the 2002 Election and the 2005 Elections. These elections have to be situated within first and second decade political developments such as the civil conflict in Matebeleland and Midlands [1982-87], the Unity Accord between ZANU and ZAPU in 1987, the emergence of ZUM and its vigorous opposition to the idea of one party legislation in the 1990s, the emergence of vibrant opposition party in 2000, rejection of the Draft Constitution, the shift to Fast Track Land Reform Program, human rights issues and manner of implementation of the reform program estranged relations with the West, adoption of SADC Principles and Guidelines on Democratic Elections in 2004, among others.

The interplay of historical and political factors during this period also had a direct bearing on voting trends. While the first three elections had sustained voter interest, the period 1985 to 1995 was generally characterized by voter apathy. From an estimated turnout of 94 % in 1980, the proportion declined steadily over the years to 84% in 1985 and 47% in 1990. The emergence and participation of ZUM in the 1995 elections somehow galvanized voter interest, though it was short lived.

The Post 2000 Era

The post 1999 saw a resurgence of more competitive party politics with increases in voter turnout in the 2000 election in quantitative terms. Out of 5.04 million registered voters, about 2.5 million voted in the election. The post 2000 era therefore marked a watershed in voter turnout trends. The Constitution Reform process and the 2000 Referendum revived interest in national politics. The NO VOTE result in a way revealed that ZANU PF was not as invincible as was generally supposed. The 2000 election also marked a watershed in that it put to an end the de facto one-party state situation when the MDC won 57 out of the 120 directly elected seats. The election signaled stiff competition between ZANU PF and MDC.

On a negative note, the 2000 and 2002 elections also marked descent into widespread violence, coercion and intimidation with over 150 people reportedly killed [ZPP Report, 2006]. The run up to the 2002 presidential elections was one of the most politically volatile post independence election eras ever experienced in Zimbabwe. It experienced the highest record of gross forms of violence in comparison with the 2005. Topping the list in terms of election violations were the four provinces of Manicaland, Mashonaland East, Masvingo and the Midlands with Mashonaland West and Central as serious hot spot contenders. These provinces are incidentally ruling party strongholds.

Election violence also took the form of hate speech and hate politics from both main presidential contenders, however with ruling party candidates on the lead, ruling party political rallies generally laced with slogans such as Pasi ne MDC, fist pointing, use of military language, swearing, labeling of other contestants as enemies of the state, sellouts and stooges of the West, betrayers of the revolution and declarations by the service chiefs that they would not salute any presidential winner who does not have war liberation war credentials.

This escalation in violence in the run up to the 2002 presidential elections has to be understood within the context of the emergence of the MDC and its visible inroads into areas that had hitherto been ruling party strongholds. Organized violence may have been utilized as a political weapon designed to fence off rural areas from opposition penetration. Also instructive is to note that the 2002 presidential elections had occurred hot on the heels of a shocking NO VOTE referendum, a vote out-turn which the ruling party interpreted as part of a grand imperialist strategy by the MDC, the white commercial farmer and the British to stab the ZANU PF-initiated land acquisition agenda on the back. Thus, within ruling party thinking, the NO VOTE was a warning signal that its "liberation agenda" was under siege.

It was in these contexts that restrictive pieces of legislation such as the Public Order and Security Act [POSA] and Access to Information and Protection of Privacy Act [AIPPA], developments which political analysts liken to the Smith Regime which relied on an array of repressive measures [for instance, the notorious Law and Order [Maintenance] Act] which had given virtually unlimited powers to the government to search private homes, ban or restrict public gatherings, ban publications and break labor strikes, among other things.

The resuscitation of the land issue and its quick conversion into an election campaign political good tensed up the political temperature and polarized society as criticism of land implementation was treated as total rejection of the land redistribution agenda and what the liberation war was fought for. Relations between the government and UK, USA and organizations such as the Commonwealth and European Union also took a worse turn.

However on a positive note, the era was witness to the adoption of the SADC Principles and Guidelines governing the conduct of democratic elections in 2004, although compliance with these Guidelines has remained a major electoral challenge in Zimbabwe. The period also witnessed the re-introduction of the Upper House [Senate], a development which however resulted in a split in the MDC into MDC T and MDC over whether or not to participate in Senate elections, with the former being anti-Senate while the latter was pro-Senate.

The Post 2005 Election

The 2008 Elections were conducted against a background of deep-rooted political and economic meltdown. On the economic front, Zimbabwe was grappling with its worst economic recession characterized by runaway inflation of over 1 million percent, acute basic commodity, drugs fuel, and foreign currency shortages, and flight of skilled manpower and power cuts.

On the political front, the elections came at a time when all that has been tried to solve the Zimbabwean crisis through “smart” sanctions, SADC-brokered negotiations appeared to be floundering. The SADC-brokered talks between the two political parties mediated by the South African president Thabo Mbeki that had been going on and off since 2004 had reportedly reached a stalemate. South Africa’s policy of engagement or quiet diplomacy was increasingly under threat, the South African president accused of treating ZANU PF with kid gloves. There was a growing feeling within the MDC, civic groups and some African Heads of States to view the Zimbabwe crisis as an African issue rather than a mere SADC issue. In October 2007, Senegalese President Wade had recommended a shift to multilateral mediation by African Heads of State, arguing that Mbeki should not be the only one to handle the Zimbabwean crisis, a recommendation which was rejected by both Mbeki and Mugabe who argued that there should not be any other initiative other than the SADC one.

There were also increasing calls for the two main political parties, ZANU PF and the MDC, to abandon their hard-line positions. ZANU PF as the ruling party was exhorted to realize that it needs the help of the MDC, all patriotic Zimbabweans and the international community to untangle itself from the political mess aground. They were called upon to involve elements from the ruling party, the two formations of the MDC, other opposition groups, civic society organizations, churches, labor unions, student movements and the business community. This “third way” initiative gained currency against growing realization that the two main contending factions, ZANU PF and MDC, were experiencing deep seated internal feuding that posed a threat to their political survival and their political will to hold on to on-going talks.

Political Actors

While the 29 March Harmonized Elections saw around eight political parties [ZANU PF, MDC T, MDC, Mavambo, UPP, FDU, PUMA, ZDP, and ZPPDP] and independents registering for elections, the contest was mainly between ZANU and the MDC T as the visibility of the other political parties remained on paper. However, the MDC as the main opposition election contender was home to factional and leadership feuding. Allegations of political in-fights within MDC were vindicated when a simple issue of whether or not to participate in the senatorial elections of 2005 left the MDC split into an “anti-Senate” MDC Tsvangirai and a pro-Senate MDC Mutambara wing. Despite spirited calls to forge a re-union, MDC participated in the 29 March 2008 Elections a divided house, a development that proved costly to both factions as ZANU PF was quick to capitalize on these divisions and captured some seats in what were generally perceived to be strong MDC strongholds. The period also saw the MDC abandoning its traditional strategy of mass action to one of engagement with its political rivalry, ZANU PF. Confrontation as a strategy to dislodge ZANU PF has not been effective because of repressive legislation, a highly partisan police and state security service.

The ruling party entered the 29 March Election virtually a limping party with widespread reports of brewing fissures and cracks within the party. It was in essence a party at war with itself. These internal rumblings though muffled, reportedly gravitated around the succession issue, a leadership crisis that has been simmering as far back as late 1990s, with the famous "Mugabe must go" Mavhaire parliamentary motion and the Mkoba MP, Fredrick Shaba's "Mugabe must not continually succeed himself", among others. Flashes of these sentiments were also manifest during the provincial consultations on Constitutional Reforms in 1999.

In the run up to the December 2007 Special Congress, ZANU PF power struggle had reportedly intensified with an alleged faction calling for the endorsement of President Mugabe as the ruling party's presidential election candidacy while another alleged rival faction was reportedly calling for the replacement of President Mugabe as the ruling party's presidential election candidacy. A statement by ZANU PF spokesman, a week before the special Congress that the congress would "have the election of the presidency as the main thing", to some extent indicates that the posts of President and his deputies as well as party chair were going to be reviewed.

Also of significance were the November-December 2007 solidarity marches organized by war veterans led by Jabulani Sibanda in the ten provinces across the country in support of Robert Mugabe as the ruling party presidential candidate. War veterans, reportedly used this as an opportunity to lobby for a parliamentary quota system for the ex-combatants, arguing that they had been marginalized for too long.

A competitive edge was added to the electoral landscape when the ZANU PF politiburo member Simba Makoni announced that he would contest the presidency as an independent candidate. Makoni's announcement caught the country by surprise considering that ZANU PF had given the nation the impression that President Mugabe had been unanimously endorsed as the party's candidate. Simba Makoni's entrance into the presidential race gave the electorate broader choice of representatives in this election, some link the current political impasse to this development arguing the entry into the presidential race has divided the votes from both the MDC and ZANU PF leading to the run off.

There were also media reports that former Minister of Information, Jonathan Moyo and former Harare South legislator Margaret Dongo had filed court papers challenging the nomination court date that had been set by President Mugabe. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission also announced that the inspection of the voters' roll would be conducted between 1 and 7 February 2008, however later extended to 14 February 2008. Inspection was to be conducted countrywide at an estimated 5000 inspection centers.

Emerging Political Issues

Also of electoral significance were the SADC brokered talks aimed at forging working relations between the two main political actors, ZANU PF and the MDC. The need for the two political parties to forge unity was as far back as 2002. With continued socioeconomic meltdown in the post 2005 era, the two political parties came under renewed pressure to engage each other for the sake of development. While negotiations have been on and off, of electoral significance were agreements made to pass the Zimbabwe Constitutional Amendment No. 18 of 2007 which resulted among other things, in electoral law reforms relating to delimitation of boundaries, voter registration, tabulation of election results and media coverage, among others.

However, the adoption of Constitutional Amendment No. 18 of 2007 generated much debate with MDC stakeholders threatening to disown the MDC for failing to consult them prior to agreement. NGOs such as ZESN, Zimbabwe Restoration of Human Rights, NCA, Crisis Zimbabwe Coalition, MISA, ZLHR etc issued communiqués expressing disquiet over its adoption. In fact, for a number of civic groups, the agreement amounted to a “climb-down” on the part of the MDC.

Of general concern to civic groups and the attentive public were aspects of the Bill which sought to allow Parliament to elect a new President to replace one who dies, resigns or is removed from office without specifying any particular majority by which a new President must be elected. This change, as argued by ZESN, was undemocratic as it goes against constitution [section 28(2)] that an executive president must be elected by popular vote. No reason, including the fact that elections are expensive, cannot justify a provision that would allow an executive President to hold office without a popular mandate.

The Bill also sought to change the composition of the Senate and House of Assembly. The Senate then comprised 66 Senators, of whom 50 were elected on a constituency basis, 10 being chiefs and six appointed by the President. The change in the Bill therefore meant enlarging the Senate from 50 to 93 of whom 60 were to be directly elected on a constituency basis, 10 provincial governors, 18 chiefs and five appointed by the President. Before the Bill, the House of Assembly consisted of 120 elected members, 10 provincial governors, eight chiefs and 12 presidential appointees. Under the Bill the House was going to have 210 members all of whom were directly elected by the people on a constituency basis.

This increase in the number of seats in Parliament was viewed as an undesirable and fiscally unjustifiable development which was poised to escalate the expenses of running parliament. A reduction in the number of MPs who owe their seats to the President is most welcome. Both Houses of Parliament must be elected with the President appointing none to their seats. The fundamental point was that the Executive must not be allowed to appoint any members of the Legislature and governors at all.

The main political actors also agreed to scrap the post of Executive Mayor in towns and cities, a development that received mixed views within civil society, some arguing that the MDC had been duped by ZANU PF as they interpreted the decision as essentially a way of diluting the MDC power base in the main cities and towns which since 2000 had fallen to the MDC.

However, while the Constitution of Zimbabwe Amendment No 18 had its own grey areas, it gave birth to a number of positive electoral changes, for instance changes in the polling process that made it mandatory to post poll results at polling stations using V 11, 12, V13 forms, increased access of opposition to national electronic and print media, political tolerance, and amendments to POSA and AIPPA which increased accessibility of all areas by the opposition towards March Harmonized elections.

Relations with the West

The 29 March 2008 Election also came at a time when relations between Zimbabwe with the Commonwealth, Britain, USA, just to mention a few, were at their lowest. Following the fast-track land reform program and violent campaigns for the 2000 general elections and the 2002 presidential election, a verbal cold war has erupted between Zimbabwe and the western countries with Britain and the USA accused of meddling into the internal affairs of Zimbabwe and through supporting the opposition MDC plotting to effect "regime change". Since 2005 election campaigns in Zimbabwe have generally gone under the tag Anti-Blair/Bush Elections creating that the actual contest is between Zimbabwe, Britain and the USA. Implied here was that the MDC was an inconsequential puppet party. This deterioration in relations with western countries has seen Zimbabwe diverting its erstwhile reliance from the West to Eastern world adopting a Look East Policy, a policy that has seen Zimbabwe relying more and more on China, India, Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand and Indonesia

Also instructive to note is that while over the years, SADC countries have demonstrated their solidarity with Zimbabwe [for instance, by calling the Commonwealth and the European Union to lift targeted "smart" sanctions against Zimbabwe, or refusing to attend SADC-EU ministerial meetings that excluded Zimbabwe] the post 2005 era witnessed growing uneasiness with political developments in Zimbabwe with Zambia, Botswana and even Tanzania openly expressing their disquiet with the situation in Zimbabwe. The unfolding scenario is one of a country and a leadership that is increasingly facing isolation.

CHAPTER TWO

LEGAL, INSTITUTIONAL, AND ELECTORAL FRAMEWORKS

Introduction

The effectiveness and fairness of elections in any country largely hinges on how well the legal framework is constituted. The legal framework must provide for a climate in which voters can freely participate in the electoral process. An election is the only opportunity in one's life when national citizens can exercise their democratic right to define their social, economic and political destiny through the ballot box.

To this end, the legal framework must empower relevant bodies to conduct rigorous observation and monitoring of all stages of the electoral process. It must also provide for an impartial and professional enforcement of the laws by law enforcement agencies. In short, a well constituted legal framework is critical in building voter confidence in the electoral process.

However, legislation alone is not enough as voters need to see how any newly crafted laws are enforced before, during, and after elections. The political parties contesting the elections also need to test the efficacy of the new laws and satisfy themselves that they are being properly implemented.

Legal Framework

The term legal framework refers to the constitutional and legislative provisions governing the conduct of elections in the country at a given period. The term therefore covers the Constitution of Zimbabwe, the Electoral Act [Chapter 2:11], the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission Act [Chapter 2:12] as amended by the Electoral Laws Amendment Act of 2008 and other relevant regulations. These legal frameworks provide parameters for the conduct of elections, the delimitation of constituency boundaries and the operation of the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission.

The Electoral Act, among other things, provides for a Registrar-General of Voters and constituency registrars, the registration of voters, the preparation, compilation and maintenance of voters rolls, the qualifications of voters, the nomination and election of candidates to Parliament, the office of President and local authorities. The Electoral Act also establishes the Electoral Court and provides for its functions, which include the hearing and determination of election petitions. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission Act establishes the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission and provides for its functions in detail. The ZEC therefore has a statutory existence.

Institutional Framework

The adoption of Constitution of Zimbabwe No 18 of 2008 had provisions for the amendment of the electoral elect, changes that saw most functions traditionally undertaken by the Delimitation Commission, Electoral Supervisory Commission and the Registrar-General placed under the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission. Under this framework, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission is mandated to:

- Prepare for, conduct and supervise all elections and referendums and to ensure that such elections are conducted freely, fairly, transparently and in accordance with the law;
- Supervise the registration of voters being conducted by the Registrar of Voters;
- Compile voters' rolls and registers;
- Ensure the proper custody and maintenance of voters' rolls and registers;
- Design, print and distribute ballot papers, approve the form of and procure ballot boxes, and establish and operate polling centers;
- Conduct voter education; accredit observers of elections and referendums;
- Give instructions to the Registrar-General of Voters in regard to the exercise of its functions;
- Instruct other persons in the employment of the state or local authority in order to ensure efficient, proper, free and fair conduct of elections, and
- Exercise any other functions the Electoral Law and any other law may impose that on the Commission.

In addition to these functions set out in the Constitution, the Commission is enjoined to undertake research into electoral matters, to promote co-operation between the Government and political parties and other bodies concerned with elections, and also to inform the public about all issues relating to elections.

Its composition is detailed in section 61 of the Constitution rather than in the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission Act. Amendments were made by the Electoral Laws Amendment Act to reflect this fact. This transformed the Commission into a constitutional body rather than one which owes its existence to an Act of Parliament. This in principle makes the Commission more independent.

In terms of the Electoral Laws Amendment Act of 2008 [Section 17 of ZEC Act as amended], employees of the Police Force, Defense Forces and Prison Service can no longer be seconded as staff of the Commission except where their services are required for the provision of security.

The pool of persons who can be seconded to the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission has been expanded. Now not only persons employed by the Public Service Commission may be seconded, the Electoral Commission can also call upon the Health Services Board and responsible authorities of any statutory or local government body to make their employees available for election service.

However, the Commission's over reliance on public service employees may have a peeling effect on its operational effectiveness and autonomy. Seconding persons such as recently retired members of the armed forces will circumvent this provision. Even though these persons have resigned from their military positions, there is a perception that the management of elections has been heavily militarized.

The law should also explicitly exclude members of intelligence services as members of these forces are now viewed as being politically partisan. Use of such personnel in connection with elections is also intimidatory.

None of the changes made by the Act will have much effect on the functioning of the Commission unless the Commission's members are perceived to be politically independent, efficient and dedicated to ensuring that elections are held in accordance with the law. The importance of the impartiality, all-inclusiveness, competence and accountability of the Commission is emphasized. The method of appointment of Commissioners should be changed to reassure political parties and the electorate that Commissioners will be impartial. ZEC should be appointed with the participation of opposition parties and key stakeholders. The selection process of commissioners should be transparent and engender confidence in all stakeholders. These selection processes should also ensure that gender marginalized and special needs groups and youth participation or representation is achieved.

Adequate, competent and qualified personnel should also staff ZEC. It is necessary to ensure the independence of the ZEC including financial autonomy. Commissioners could each be given areas of responsibility to enhance accountability. The law could require the commissioners to divide among themselves responsibility for the Commission's different activities so that each commissioner would be responsible for a particular activity and in this way promote equal participation by all Commissioners. An alternative way of distributing functions between Commissioners would be to give each Commissioner the responsibility for a particular province.

Electoral Framework

Elections in Zimbabwe have since independence been conducted within the first past the post [FPTP] electoral system, a practice that was inherited from the Westminster-type plurality or single member district [SMD] system, in which the candidate with the highest number of votes wins. Implied in this framework is that a winner with less than 51 percent of voters in constituency may be elected. However, the growing perception is that such "winner-take-all" or "zero sum" electoral frameworks are no longer consistent with the unfolding political and leadership challenges. This exclusionary approach generates tension in an environment. The solution to the political stalemate in Zimbabwe lies in an electoral paradigmatic shift to more inclusive, accommodating, win-win electoral systems based on proportional representation [for the Senate] and mixed electoral systems [for the parliament].

While in past elections a presidential candidate with the highest number of votes, even if below 50% of the electorate would be eligible for presidency, in the 29 March Election, for a presidential candidate to be eligible, he/she had to garner not only the traditional majority vote, but also a stipulated 50% + 1 vote. In the event of failure to meet the requirement, the Act provided for a run-off. However, the system remains winner-take all.

Amendments to relevant pieces of legislation such as the Public Order and Security Act [POSA], Access to Information and Protection of Privacy Act [AIPPA] and the Broadcasting Act have also added a competitive edge to the electoral environment. However these amendments were rather piecemeal and also lacking in citizen input. Furthermore, there was a reversal to some of the reforms made on the eve of the 29 March Election through a presidential proclamation. A case in point was the reversal of the reform requiring police officers to be stationed 100ms from polling stations. Compliance has also been on the low side as MDC "Freedom Marches" on 23 January 2008 were cancelled.

Legality of the 27 June Run- Off Election Date

According to the presidential results released on 2 May 2008 by the ZEC, no candidate achieved an absolute majority of the votes cast. Section 110 [3] of the Electoral Act [Chapter 2:13] stipulates that in such circumstances a run off election “shall be held within 21 days after the previous election”. ZEC however delayed the run off election until June 2008 purporting to be doing so in terms of section 192[5] of the Electoral Act and by that delay extended the retention of power by President.

There have been different interpretations of the section of the Act where it is stated that “ a second election shall be held within twenty-one days after the previous election” with some [including the MDC] arguing that the “previous election day” refers to the 29 March 2008 while others [ZEC, Government and ZANU PF] interpret it as May 2 , that is, the day when presidential results were released.

Statutory Instrument 73A/2008 gazetted by ZEC on 15 May 2008 made provision for the Presidential Run-Off Election to be held within 90 days of 2 May [the day of the declaration of the Presidential Election results] implying that the run –off would have to be held on or before 31 July 2008.

On 16 May, through Statutory Instrument 78, ZEC also announced that the run –off would take place on 27 June 2008 appearing to have invoked the powers given to it by the section of the Electoral Act read with section 195 [5] [a] thereof in order to extend the 21 day period for the runoff stipulated by section 110[3] of the Electoral Act. ZEC announced the dates through a statutory instrument which it described as the Electoral [Alteration of sections 39 [20][b] and 110[3] of the Electoral Act] Notice published in the Government Extraordinary of 15 May 2008. The regulations were reportedly published with the approval of the Minister of Justice, Legal and Parliamentary Affairs.

However analysis of the Electoral Act suggests that ZEC has no legal mandate to change the date of elections as its powers under section 192 appear regulatory in nature. By publication of Statutory Instrument 73A [extending the period from 21 days to 90 days], ZEC effectively amended or side-stepped the terms of section 110[3] which state that “a second election shall be held within a period of twenty-one days”. It is further noted that Statutory Instrument 73A reportedly obliges that a second election be held within 90 days “from the date of the announcement of the results of the first poll of the election of a President”.

CHAPTER THREE

ELECTORAL PROCESSES AND ENFORCEMENT GAPS

Electoral processes are the procedural and regulatory frameworks through which elections are undertaken. They provide details on the conduct of delimitation of boundaries, voter registration, voter education, nomination of candidates, media coverage, accreditation of observers, conflict management, polling, postal voting, counting of votes and tabulation of results. In short, they explain how elections are actually conducted. One has to be firmly grounded in electoral processes in order to identify unfolding electoral malpractices.

Also critical to the success of any election is the sound enforcement of electoral provisions. How the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission has enforced provisions relating to delimitation of boundaries, voter registration, voter education, nomination of candidates, among other issues, is therefore of critical concern in this chapter. Thus, besides exposing electoral gaps, the chapter in essence assesses ZEC's institutional capacity to prepare for the 29 March Elections.

Voter Registration and Inspection Processes

The Electoral Act establishes the Office of the Registrar-General of Voters and gives it extensive powers to deal with the registration of voters, prepare the voters roll and take measures to prevent election fraud. Under the new electoral framework registration is continuous with citizens entitled to apply for enrolment at any time. Voters rolls are not regarded as closed for new registrations in any election until the day before nomination day in the election concerned. Persons who claim registration on a particular voter's roll are expected to produce any satisfactory documentary evidence reasonably proving where they live. In this way the Act makes the process of establishing residence difficult particularly for urban residents in high density suburbs.

The Commissioner is obliged to provide on payment of a fee one electronic copy of a voters roll to each political party contesting an election. The copy has to be provided within seven days after the calling of the election concerned which in essence means that the copy may never be entirely up to date since additional voters may be registered until the day before nomination day in the election. Also, while it is a requirement that printed copies of voters' rolls must be made available to interested parties on payment of a reasonable fee, it is trite to note that there does not seem to be any requirement that the fee for the electronic copy of the roll must be reasonable. Furthermore while the Electoral Laws Amendment Act requires the Commission to provide printed copies of voters roll on request at any time, its obligation to provide electronic copies is restricted to the period after an election has been called.

Voter registration and the inspection of the voters roll countrywide at an estimated 5000 inspection centers was initially announced as beginning on the 2nd of February 2008 and ending on the 7th of February. This would have been the shortest inspection period for a general election since 1980 had it not been extended to the 14th of February 2008 and the nomination court date to 15 February 2008. The Election date however remained unchanged with 5 612 464 aspiring voters were on the voters' roll. A ZEC briefing indicated that 300 voters were added to the voters' roll, how they were distributed remained unknown. Former Minister of Information Jonathan Moyo and former Harare South legislator Margaret Dongo filed an urgent chamber application in the High Court challenging the nomination court date that had been set by President Mugabe, arguing that the President had unlawfully set the nomination court date before the finalization of the delimitation report which is not in compliance with section 61A of the Constitution. It also claimed that Proclamation of electoral boundaries was further defective in that it did not include the boundaries of wards yet the nomination process must be conducted based on ward voters' rolls. However, while this case was overtaken by events [with the subsequent of the nomination court], the effects of such an oversight should not be underestimated. For instance, ZANU PF primary elections for councilors held in Gwanda on 30 January 2008 using the old ward boundaries had to be re-done on 4 February 2008.

Further to this, a number of challenges were faced during inspection and registration processes. In some provinces, the absence of adequate material was experienced as people wishing to register were turned away as stationery was not available at the inspection centers. In Harare, some people that registered as voters were not given registration slips and were asked to collect these from ZEC Head Offices in Harare. Proof of residence continued to be a problematic requirement for some prospective voters, especially the youth. Political parties reportedly received voters' rolls a few days before elections while NGOs like ZESN received them after the elections. Insufficient and incorrect information was provided to citizens about the registration process, little time allocated for the inspection of the voters roll while in some cases, upon registration, some potential voters were not provided with registration slips [green passes]. Since voter registration is continuous and the rolls are stored electronically, it is strongly recommended that they be available to political parties and relevant election observers at any time in both printed and electronic form.

Also, while the Electoral Laws Amendment Act [2008] empowers the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission, rather than the Registrar-General to be responsible for keeping and maintaining voters' rolls, a clearer demarcation needs to be made between the functions of the Commission and the Registrar-General in regard to voter registration. For instance, while the Commission will "keep and maintain" the rolls, the function of registering voters and updating the rolls remains with constituency registrars, who are under the control of the Registrar-General. In practice, the office of the Registrar-General has remained visible in the preparation and inspection of the voters' roll. On 31 January 2008, the Registrar-General, Tobaiwa Mudede, was quoted saying that his office would be training and deploying staff to oversee the inspection of the voter's roll. A complete transfer of all functions to ZEC in order to ensure its efficiency and independence is recommended.

Delimitation Processes

The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission is now responsible for delimiting constituencies and other electoral boundaries. The Electoral Commission is obliged to give public notice before embarking on a delimitation exercise and entertain representations from political parties and other interested parties who are likely to be affected by its decisions. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission Act specifically requires the Commission to keep the public informed about constituencies and other electoral boundaries, a mandate which the Commission did not fulfill as the electorate had not been given any of this vital information prior to the inspection period. Only at inspection centers was one able to access information pertaining to the wards and constituencies.

With the adoption of the Constitutional Amendment No.18 in 2007, it was mandatory to undertake a fresh delimitation exercise. Parliamentary constituencies had been increased from 150 to 210 while the senate's directly elected members were increased from 50 to 60 with six senators per province. Since the 29 March Elections also included local elections, ZEC had an onerous task of ensuring that no local authority ward falls into two or more House of Assembly constituencies. A change to ward-specific voters' roll meant that that a voter can only vote in the ward in which he or she is resident and registered to vote.

Besides these structural problems, the delimitation exercise suffered many implementation snags. Voter registration and inspections were conducted before the finalization of the delimitation exercise. Insufficient time was given for people to make inputs into the delimitation process. While the preliminary delimitation report was tabled in parliament for noting on 17 January 2008, only one copy of the Delimitation report was made available to parliamentarians in the papers office of parliament. The final Delimitation Report was tabled in Parliament very late in the electoral process, leaving ZEC little time to educate the public on changes to ward and constituency [House of Assembly and Senate] boundaries. Delays in the delimitation of boundaries [wards and constituencies] also created confusion for the nomination processes within political parties, in some cases forcing re-runs of some primaries. Contrary to Section 61A [8] of the Constitution, Parliament is entitled to debate the report and make recommendations for changes to the setting of constituency boundaries. By end of January 2008, the President had not published the final constituency boundaries as required by the Constitution and the Electoral Act.

Several legal issues flowed from this defective process. The nomination date was set 15 days after the date of the proclamation setting the date of the elections as 29 March 2008 contrary to the Electoral Act which requires that the nomination date must not be less than 14 days and not more than 21 days after the proclamation. The object of fixing a minimum period between the proclamation and the nomination day is to give political parties an opportunity to decide who should represent them in each constituency since they can only do so if they know where the constituencies are going to be. At the time of the proclamation, political parties were not given adequate opportunity to see the preliminary report, a development that made a mockery of the nomination process. It also makes a mockery of the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission Act which requires the Commission to keep the public informed about constituencies and other election boundaries. The electorate had not been given any of this vital information prior to the inspection period. Only at inspection centers was one able to access information pertaining to the ward and constituency. In future, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission which is now responsible for delimiting constituencies and other electoral boundaries must be obliged to give public notice before embarking on a delimitation exercise and "so far as is practicable within the time available" entertain representations from political parties and other interested parties who are likely to be affected by its decisions.

Nomination Processes

The Electoral Law provides for nomination procedures at presidential, parliamentary and local authority level. A candidate for election to the office of President must submit a nomination paper signed by not fewer than ten persons who are registered on the voters' rolls for constituencies within each province. The form specifies a distinctive symbol which the candidate wishes to appear on the ballot paper in conjunction with his or her name; and if the candidate is to stand or to be sponsored by any political party, specify that fact, together with the name of the political party and an abbreviation of such name which the candidate wishes to appear on the ballot paper.

In the case of election to Parliament a parliamentary candidate, must submit a nomination paper signed by not fewer than ten people who are registered on the voters roll for the constituency for which the candidate seeks election. For local election candidates, aspiring councillors must be endorsed by at least five people whose names appear on the voters roll for the ward concerned. In all elections, nomination papers may be lodged with the Commission at any time after the publication of the notice of election and the closing of the nomination court on the day, fixed as nomination day.

A deposit must also be paid upon nomination, which is forfeited if the poll takes place and the number of valid votes cast for an unsuccessful candidate is less than one-fifth of the number of valid votes cast for the successful candidate. The Nomination Court sat on the 14th to the 15th of February 2008 with ZESN fielding observers in all venues of the nomination court sittings of the presidential, senatorial, parliamentary and local government candidates.

Four presidential candidates had lodged in their nomination papers by close of day with ZANU PF's Robert Mugabe filing his papers through Emmerson Mnangagwa, MDC's Morgan Tsvangirai lodged through Nelson Chamisa and Simba Makoni [an Independent] filling his papers in person while another independent candidate, Langton Towungwana managed to file his papers before the nomination court closed at 1600hrs. Four prospective candidates had their papers rejected by the court, namely, Daniel Shumba of the United People's Party, Ndlovu of the Peace Action Freedom for All, William Gwata of the Christian Democratic Party and Advocate Justin Chihota] had their papers rejected by the court, for among other reasons, late submission. In the case of Daniel Shumba and Advocate Chihota, it was due to inadequate documents.

However while nomination processes were largely transparent, several defects were noted. Since little time was given between the proclamation and the nomination day, political parties were not given an opportunity to decide who should represent them in each constituency. The nomination date was set before the finalisation of the delimitation exercise, yet the nomination process must be conducted based on ward voters' roll.

There were concerns with multiple candidates from same political parties attempting to file nomination papers, developments that resulted in sporadic intra-party violence at nomination courts. Also common was the rejection or disqualification of nomination papers on avoidable reasons such as inadequacy of papers, candidates being nominated by persons who are not registered as voters, or the prospective candidate's name not appearing on the voters'. The use of manual systems [use of hard copies of the voters' rolls to verify registration of candidates and supporters], limited use of computers, and use of small, often cramped venues as nomination courts invariably limited public access to the nomination process.

By the end of the nomination process, ZANU PF had fielded 217 candidates in the 210 House of Assembly constituencies. It had managed to field candidates in all but two [Mtoko North and Mkoba] of the published 208 constituencies. However the nomination results for Glen View North and Muzarabani South did not appear on the official results schedule released by ZEC. The list also showed that apart from failing to field candidates in two constituencies, ZANU PF had nine constituencies where they fielded more than one candidate. Two candidates were nominated for each of Sunningdale, Makoni North, Makoni West, Chivi North, Gutu South, Masvingo Central, Zaka Central, Mtoko East and Gutu West while three candidates were nominated for Glen View South.

The MDC faction managed to field 200 House of Assembly candidates while failing to field candidates in 17 constituencies [Chitungwiza North, Harare West, Makoni North, Dangamvura-Chikanga, Murehwa West, Mtoko East, Chakari, Masvingo Central, Mwenezi West, Zaka North, Tsholotsho North, Tsholotsho South, Gwanda South, Gwanda North, Matobo South and Chirumanzu-Zibabgwe]. The formation also had double entries in 11 constituencies [Chirumanzu, Gweru Urban, Vhungu, Shurugwi North, Zvishavane-Runde, Zvishavane-Ngezi, Mtoko North, Shamva North, Marondera West, Murehwa North and Glen View South].The MDC Mutambara faction managed to field 152 House of Assembly candidates while independent candidates around the whole country add up to 105.

Voter and Civic Education Processes

Under the current Electoral Act, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission has primary responsibility for conducting a programme of voter education. The Commission is obliged to commence a programme of voter education not later than 90 days before the polling day of an election and to conduct accurate and unbiased voter education. In conducting its program the Commission is also expected to ensure that those it employs have sound knowledge of the electoral laws and processes and that they remain scrupulously impartial and do not show bias for or against any particular political party. The Electoral Act also provides for civic participation in voter education. Interested civic organizations are obliged to furnish ZEC with copies of all the proposed voter education materials and ensure that the materials is not misleading or biased in favour of any political party. Voter education is provided by citizens or permanent residents domiciled in the country, operating through an authorized organization. However, the Act bans foreign funding.

However in the 29 March Election, voter education started late and also with reports of “little voter education” having been conducted by ZEC by the time of elections. Voter education efforts were also reportedly compromised by resource constraints, inadequate training of voter educators, and insufficient and incorrect information on the electoral process as well as contradictory information on how voters requiring assistance would be treated. For instance, some cases ZEC brochures reportedly stated that proof of residence would be required on polling day, in addition to identification documents, misleading information that caused undue alarm to prospective voters given the challenges experienced in securing proof of residence.

This gap was filled by the visible participation in civic education of local NGOs with ZESN playing a lead role. Besides the newspaper adverts, there was no visible, prior awareness or publicity campaign to brief the electorate on this critical component of the electoral process. ZESN conducted public outreach workshops countrywide coupled with radio and television adverts in which it was encouraging people to register as voters. It also used both independent and private media to flight newspaper adverts.

However ZESN adverts deemed to be direct voter education were scrapped from the electronic and print media following a letter from ZEC asserting that the law only allowed the conducting of voter education by institutions authorized to do so by ZEC. The letter was copied to media houses and the Zimbabwe Broadcasting Services. Civic education adverts inserted by civil society organizations such as National Associations for the Care of the Handicapped [NASCOH] were also taken off the air after a few days after ZEC’s intervention.

Polling Procedures

Sections 28 [3] and 58[1] of the Constitution of Zimbabwe Amendment Act No. 18 require presidential, parliamentary, senatorial and local authority elections to be held simultaneously. Under this framework, voters are entitled to vote even if they are not registered on the ward voters roll, so long as they can produce a voters’ registration certificate (which, presumably, must show that they are entitled to be registered on the roll]. Before being issued with a ballot paper, a registered voter is required to produce a voters’ registration certificate or proof of identity. It is however trite to not that few if any voters were issued with voter’s registration certificates.

The Electoral Act also allows polling to be held over one or more days with polling days as public holidays, ideally fixed to coincide with a weekend. Before polling begins, every presiding officer has to count the number of ballot papers received at his/her polling station, and the count is to take place in the presence of candidates, election agents and observers. However, the number of voting compartments and ballot boxes to be provided in each polling station is no longer fixed in the Act but left to the discretion of the presiding officer. It is however recommended that the law should go further and require the Commission to disclose the total number of ballot papers printed for each election.

Postal Voting

In terms of the Electoral Act, postal voting is restricted to disciplined force members and electoral officers who will be absent from their constituencies on electoral duties, and officials who are absent from the country on Government service, and spouses of such persons. However, over the years, postal voting in Zimbabwe has remained controversial, shrouded in secrecy, inaccessible to observers, riddled with allegations of intimidation, malpractice and non-transparency. In the 27 June 2008 run-off, members of the security forces reportedly voted in the presence, and under the directions of Commanding Officers, with juniors allegedly instructed to vote for the ZANU PF presidential candidate or risk losing their jobs. This practice constitutes a banal breach to the basic principles that underpin electoral practices. It is strongly recommended that the doctrine of secrecy that is applied to other electoral processes must also apply to postal voting. The Electoral Commission should also be given the power to establish a system that allows Zimbabweans living outside the country to vote by post if they are unable to return to Zimbabwe to cast their votes.

Counting of Votes and Tabulation of Poll Results

The Electoral Laws Amendment made several minor changes to the way in which votes are counted and the results of elections are collated and announced. When the votes have been counted at a polling station, the presiding officer will have to record them on a return and post them up outside the polling station before sending them to the constituency elections officer. This must be done in the presence of the candidates and their agents and will certainly go some way towards ensuring transparency in the counting process, so long as candidates and political parties are able to deploy agents at every polling station to witness the counting of votes.

Procedures for Recounts

Section 67A of the Electoral Act gives candidates and political parties the right to a recount of votes if they can satisfy the Commission that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there was a miscount that affected the result. The Act provides that "Within forty-eight hours after a constituency elections officer has declared a candidate to be duly elected in terms of section 66(1), any political party or candidate that contested the election in the ward or constituency concerned may request the Commission to conduct a recount of votes in one or more of the polling stations in the constituency."

It also stipulates that the request for a recount made by political party or candidate be in writing signed by an appropriate representative of the political party or candidate making the request. The request must specifically state the number of votes believed to have been miscounted and, if possible, how the miscount may have occurred as well as how the results of the election have been affected by the alleged miscount.

Section 67 A [4] also stipulates that the Commission, may on its own initiative, order a recount of votes in any polling stations if it considers there are reasonable grounds for believing that the votes were miscounted and that, if they were, the miscount would have affected the result of the election.

However, information pertaining to the ground upon which the vote recount was ordered was largely sketchy and conflicting. The claim by ZANU PF that its candidate requested the recount citing various irregularities raises the question whether these complaints were lodged within the confines of the section 67A of there was reportedly no documentary evidence provided despite requests for this. Without such evidence, the recounting of votes for Senatorial, House of Assembly and Local Authority seats would be unlawful.

However, in GN 58A/2008, it is apparent that the recount was ordered by ZEC by virtue of its powers in terms of section 67A [4]. Even in the event that ZEC ordered the recounts, the need for certainty and finality of the electoral process would require that this, too, be done within 48 hours of the declarations made to duly elect candidates.

In respect of the presidential recount, the common view was that as there are no provisions for a presidential recount in the Electoral Act, if ZEC were to follow the practice used for recounts of parliamentary constituencies, a recount could only be ordered after the announcement of the results. Candidates would then have 48 hours within which to request for a recount on the grounds indicated in the Act.

There was also concern about the storage and security of ballot boxes and electoral material since Election Day. Section 70 of the Electoral Act states that once votes have been counted at polling stations ballot papers and related documents be placed in sealed packets and delivered to the constituency elections officer. The constituency elections officer is obliged to store these in places designated by the Chief Elections Officer.

Media Coverage of Elections

Under the Electoral Act, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission is obliged to monitor broadcasters during the election period to ensure that they observe these provisions. The Act empowers the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission, with the approval of the Justice Minister, to pass regulations governing electoral reporting by the public media. Ideally, a fair and balanced allocation of time between each political party and independent candidate; each political party and independent candidate is allowed a reasonable opportunity to present a case through the broadcasting service concerned.

While advertisements from different political parties appeared though late in state controlled media as well as air time was also made available to different political parties on state controlled radio and television stations, the news in the state controlled media continued to be extremely biased in favor of the ruling party. Also disquieting is that although there have been reforms to the laws governing media in Zimbabwe, there continues to be no independent radio or television stations.

Accreditation of Observers

Under the new provisions of the Electoral Laws Amendment Act 2008, all observers are accredited by the Electoral Commission's Observation Accreditation Committee. Previously the Minister of Foreign Affairs was responsible for the invitation of individuals representing foreign countries, international, regional organizations, and foreign eminent persons to observe elections in Zimbabwe. However, while in terms of the Electoral Laws Amendment Act 2008 such persons can apply to Electoral Commission and Observer Committee for accreditation, it is instructive to note that the Committee cannot accredit a person if the Foreign Minister objects to such person observing the election. In this way, the law gives back veto powers to the Minister.

In the case of local organizations and eminent persons from within Zimbabwe, it is the Minister of Justice Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, who in addition to veto powers, has the right to invite such persons to observe the election. However, many credible international organizations that are signatories to Declaration of Principles for International Observers were refused accreditation.

Also, accreditation was only conducted in Harare and Bulawayo placing great hardship on individuals who wanted to serve the people of Zimbabwe by being a non-partisan election observer. While ZEC accredited both domestic and international observers, the accreditation and arrival of SADC observers appeared to coincide with an improvement in the pre-election environment. The Electoral Commission must accredit sufficient numbers of local and international observers to allow comprehensive observation of elections. This function should lie solely in the hands of ZEC, which should not indulge in cherry-picking observers.

While ZESN had identified 11 808 observers to participate in the March 2008 Harmonized Elections, due to logistical challenges, only 8 667 observers were accredited and deployed to observe the election in the 9 111 polling stations announced by ZEC. All ZESN observers were accredited by the ZEC and signed a ZESN Code of Conduct obliging them to observe elections in a non-partisan manner. Other domestic observers were fielded by the churches and the Law Society.

Civil Society Organisations

Civil society organisations provide critical gap filling roles in the electoral process. They in particular have a critical role to play in the provision of civic education. ZESN reportedly conducted community workshops countrywide coupled with radio and television adverts in which it was encouraging people to register as voters. ZESN also used both independent and private media to flight newspaper adverts.

However, ZESN adverts deemed to be direct voter education were scrapped from the electronic and print media following a letter from ZEC asserting that the law only allowed the conducting of voter education by institutions authorized to do so by ZEC.

Civic education adverts inserted by civil society organizations such as National Associations for the Care of the Handicapped [NASCOH] were also taken off the air after a few days after ZEC's intervention. In Manicaland, GOAL was denied access to the community as it was perceived to be in cohorts with opposition MDC. In Harare Central, the theatre group, Vhitori Entertainment conducted theatre performances encouraging people to register as voters. In Bulawayo, Radio Dialogue held community radio simulations encouraging people to go and vote while CCJP, ZimRights CIVNET, and Global Arts Trust also carried out civic education throughout the country. The Crisis Coalition held a "Rock Da Vote" musical concerts urging the youths to register as voters while the Women's Trust held workshops and Women Can Do It media campaigns urging women's participation in the elections.

Conflict Management

As provided in the Electoral Act, the Electoral Court has jurisdiction over the hearing of appeals and petitions. The Court is obliged to resolve expeditiously disputes before the election has taken place. The current Electoral Act requires the Court to determine election petitions within six months of the date of its presentation. The determination of pre-election disputes should be done fairly but within a very tight time frame. In practice, electoral petitions have not been solved within the set time frame. There is also need to ensure that a competent, well-resourced, effective, independent and impartial judiciary and electoral institutions is in place. The Electoral Court should be given adequate jurisdiction to resolve disputes before the election has taken place. While other mechanisms like multi-liaison committees were set up, they remained invisible in both intent and practice.

Electoral Offences

Section 133A of the Electoral Laws Amendment Act 2008 introduced new provisions that spell out in detail what constitutes the offence of intimidation. Inflicting or threatening to inflict bodily harm, causing or threatening to cause bodily harm or abducting a person are electoral offences if the person doing these things compels a person or persons generally to vote for a political party or to refrain from voting or to attend a political meeting. They also constitute electoral offences if they are committed by a person who, in order to compel another person to vote for a political party, withholds or threatens to withhold any assistance to which that other person is entitled or illegally does or threatens to do anything to the disadvantage of another person.

However for these provisions to be effective they will need to be properly enforced by the law enforcement agencies. Where complaints of political intimidation are made to the Electoral Commission, the Commission should be given powers to direct the Commissioner-General of Police to ensure that an urgent and proper investigation is conducted into the complaints. It is also instructive to note that electoral processes can hardly be understood in isolation from the legal framework.

Polling Stations

ZEC published the list of polling stations on 8 March 2008. Below is a table showing the number of polling stations and the average number of registered voters by province:

Provinces, Constituencies and Registered Voters

Province	Registered Voters	Polling Stations	Average Number of Registered Voters per Polling Station	Assembly Constituencies	Average Number of Registered Voters per Assembly Constituency
Bulawayo	313,459	207	1,514,3	12	26,121,6
Harare	766,478	379	2,022,4	29	26,430,3
Manicaland	709,664	1,150	617.1	26	27,294,8
Mashonaland Central	448,477	774	579,4	18	24,915,4
Mashonaland East	624,630	1,038	601,8	23	27,157,8
Mashonaland West	582,989	1,100	530.0	22	26,499,5
Masvingo	699,199	1,202	581,7	26	26,892,3
Matabeleland North	345,264	545	633,5	13	26,558,8
Matabeleland South	342,280	528	648,3	13	26,329,2
Midlands	739,510	1,289	573,7	28	26,411,1
TOTAL	5,571,950	9,132	687,5	210	26,533.1

However, the list contained significant errors and relatively few polling stations in Bulawayo and Harare provinces. The polling station information for Matebeleland North appeared to be scrambled, with polling stations located in the wrong constituency. For instance, Victoria Pre-School polling station is listed in Ward 1 of Binga Rural District Council [RDC] when its actual location is in Victoria Falls Municipality. ZESN called on ZEC to urgently print a corrected list of polling stations to ensure that all registered voters know their polling stations on Election Day.

There were also significant discrepancies in the number of registered voters per polling station for different provinces. It was particularly disquieting that the number of registered voters per polling station in Bulawayo and Harare was more than twice that of the other provinces [see table]. The situation is similar in Gweru and Mutare municipalities where the average number of registered voters per polling station was 1,234,8 and 1,277,3 respectively. As a result the average voter in Harare province would need to be processed in 22 seconds and some cases in as little as little as 9 seconds [Chitungwiza Ward 2-9,281 registered voters and 2 polling stations]. The average number of voters was supposed to be consistent by both constituency and ward. Accordingly ZESN encouraged ZEC to increase the number of polling stations in Bulawayo and Harare provinces as well as other urban centres so that all registered 5, 571,950 voters would have reasonable opportunity to vote on 29 March.

CHAPTER FOUR

PRE-29 MARCH ELECTION CAMPAIGNS AND POLLING RESULTS

Introduction

The pre-election or run up phase is a very integral phase of every electoral process. While election observers and monitors tend to be preoccupied with events a few days before and after the polling day, the election outcome is in essence the cumulative interplay of scenarios several months prior to the polling day. Underscored here is that an election outcome cannot be meaningfully unraveled outside its pre-election day dynamics. Such approaches, besides reducing elections to events on the polling day, seriously compromise capacity to capture and unravel the entire dynamics of electoral processes, often leading to premature conclusions. Cognisant of this, ZESN has over the years conducted country-wide, rural-focused, and, long term pre and post election observation systems that have enabled it to pick architectural and practice gaps that may pose serious threats to future elections. To this end, this chapter 5 will focus on analyzing the political environmental climates, identifying the main political contestants and their campaign styles.

Electoral Environment

While incidents of violence were reported in both rural and urban areas, on the whole the pre-29 March electoral environment was generally peaceful and calm with some encouraging semblance of political tolerance with youths from various contesting political parties and independents donning their own party regalia and freely mingling while traditional “no go areas” for opposition political parties were also fairly open to opposition politics.

Up to December 2007, political campaigns were largely on the low side with solidarity marches organized by the war veterans in support of Robert Mugabe as the ruling party presidential candidate, as major election related activities. Other notable election related political activities include the convening of the ZANU PF extraordinary Congress on 4th of December 2007, announcement of the preliminary results of the delimitation exercise by the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission, announcement of 29 March 2008 as the Election day as well as the reiteration by the President that election observers from “unfriendly” countries would not be allowed to observe the 2008 elections.

Also of political significance was that the South African brokered negotiations between the MDC and ZANU PF had reportedly reached a stalemate with haggling over the election date and the adoption of a new constitution before the elections. The MDC insisted that elections be deferred until a new constitution was in place while the ZANU PF delegation maintained their stance to go ahead with the elections under the current constitution. MDC threats to boycott the election if its demands were not met were dismissed and ridiculed by ZANU PF as fear of “obvious defeat”.

On the MDC side, there were speculations of a possible election pact or re-unification between the MDC [Mutambara] and the MDC [Tsvangirai] factions, developments which however did not come to fruition as the two factions entered the 29 March Election race divided. Also notable was the announcement by ZANU PF politiburo member Simba Makoni that he would contest the presidency as an independent candidate, media reports that former Minister of Information Jonathan Moyo and former Harare South legislator Margaret Dongo had filed court papers challenging the nomination court date that had been set by President Mugabe as well as the announcement by ZEC that the inspection of the voters' roll would be conducted countrywide at an estimated 5000 inspection centers between 1 and 7 February 2008, which was however later extended to 14 February 2008. The inspection of the voters' registration was however to be done before the finalization of the delimitation process.

Political Campaigns

Although campaigns started on a low note, there were also reports of coercion during the mobilization for the solidarity marches countrywide, use of inflammatory and threatening language with the service chiefs allegedly stating publicly that they would not salute anyone but the ruling party president Robert Mugabe.

ZANU PF launched its election manifesto on 29th February 2007 in Harare at a ceremony attended by its leadership at all levels, adopting a door to door political campaign approach in high density areas such as Mufakose, Dzivarasekwa, Mbare, among others. In most provinces, ZANU PF rallies were used as an opportunity to distribute farm equipments by the Reserve Bank and government, scenarios that were generally viewed as abusive of state resources. In rural areas there were reports of people who were frog marched or bused to ZANU PF star rallies. ZANU PF campaign issues revolved around its resolve to continue with the unfinished issues of the liberation struggle, land is the economy and the economy is land, black economic empowerment, the need for patriotism and protection of national sovereignty and the need to mobilize against what it called "regime change" machinations of the West. In its campaigns, Zimbabwe's socio-economic crises were projected as a result of "sanctions" purportedly engineered by the MDC. The election was also cast as a contest between Zimbabwe and the British and the USA and in the process relegating opposition political contestations to mere extensions of British and American interests. In this way ZANU PF presented its fundamental drive as that of defending the liberation agenda which it claimed to be under siege from "within" and "without".

The MDC T officially launched its election campaign on 20 January 2008 at Zimbabwe Grounds in Highfield reiterating its resolve not to participate in any election before the adoption of a new constitution, the need to fight state-engineered corruption, economic revival, need for people driven Constitution, good governance, among others. As in past elections, the MDC T is still struggling to shrug off the "pro-West" and "anti-land reform" tags.

MDC election campaigns started on a low note with reports of intra-party politicking and intra party skirmishes leading to the emergence of two leadership structures within the MDC-T in Sanyati constituency and Mashonaland West. An attempt by the MDC T on 23 January to conduct a march for a new constitution called Freedom March was denied by the police on the ground that it was likely to turn out violent. The MDC appealed to the courts as provided for in the amended Public Order and Security Act [POSA]. This was in stark contrast to the ZANU PF Million Man March where marchers were provided with police escort. In Gokwe Nembudziya, MDC T was allegedly denied use of school halls and grounds for rallies by responsible authorities although ZANU PF was reportedly allowed the use of these premises.

In Mazowe West, the MDC [T] was reportedly denied access to the community hall for their rally by local authorities in charge of the property- allegedly out of fear of victimization by ruling party structures for allowing the opposition access to communities in the area. There were also reports of vote buying in ZANU PF ahead of the primary elections with aspiring candidates allegedly supplying voters with scarce commodities at heavily discounted prices, supplying Net One cell phone lines for free and payment of school fees to children in contested constituencies.

Incidents of political intolerance were also reported. For instance, one war veteran leader Joseph Chinotimba in response to Simba Makoni's announcement to contest in the presidential race reportedly said "

We are now going to campaign vigorously for President Mugabe. I feel sorry for Makoni, ayirasa [he has lost the plot]. From today to the nomination date we will have finished with them. Mupanduki kana achinge apanduka anoziva zvinoita ZANU PF [loosely translated it means when an enemy comes out in the open he knows what ZANU PF will do].

While it could not be established whether this was the official ruling party position, it remains mindboggling how an individual who had exercised his constitutional right to stand for political office could be regarded as an enemy. Such disturbing inclinations to political intolerance were also echoed in the Zimbabwe Ex-Political Prisoners, Detainees and Ristrictees' Association's statement where Makoni was denounced as a "sellout" and a "rebel". Such inclinations were also reflected from the Herald political reporter Ceasar Zvayi who contemptuously equated Makoni's decision to a "loud fart all silently agree never happened" at the same time likening the MDC leader to a cowardly dog.

Primary Elections

Highly contested and intrigue-ridden primary elections were held for most constituencies in the country's ten provinces with both the MDC and ZANU PF generally reflecting inability to conduct primary elections in a transparent manner. Decisions by the two main political parties not to conduct primary elections in some constituencies where there were sitting MPs sparked intra party politics with prospective candidates arguing that their parties were imposing candidates.

In the MDC T camp clashes erupted when the party decided not to hold primary elections in constituencies where there were sitting MPs except for Mabvuku-Tafara and Budiro constituencies in Harare. Aspiring candidates in these constituencies felt that the move was undemocratic and registered as independents. The party's primary election for Mount Pleasant was abandoned after serious misunderstandings, only to be resolved at the party's headquarters. ZANU PF also ruled out primaries in some of its constituencies such as Chimanimani West and Gutu South while the MDC Mutambara primary elections in Nkayi were also conducted amid outcries that they were fraught with massive irregularities and allegations that some senior party members were using nepotism and dictatorship in support of certain candidates.

Where primaries were conducted, in most cases, aspiring candidates failed to accept primary election results leading to the nomination of more than one candidate in a number of constituencies in the MDC T. In ZANU PF, this led to constituencies such as Makoni West, Masvingo and Masvingo Central fielding two ZANU PF tickets. In the Chivi-Mwenezi senatorial seat, Josaya Hungwe and Samuel Mumbengegwi locked horns in a re-run after Mumbengegwi had contested the initial primary election result.

It is also instructive to note that in provinces such as Mashonaland East, Manicaland and Mashonaland Central, ZANU PF had a handful of constituencies where primary elections were not conducted because "candidates were uncontested". There were also media reports of some senior ZANU PF members winning primary elections "unopposed" following the disappearance of CVs of other aspiring candidates, cases where ZANU PF candidates dragged their party to court after reportedly being barred from contesting in the primaries by the party's provincial disciplinary committee, as well as reports of violent clashes between ZANU PF supporters during primary elections in areas such as Kadoma and Norton.

On a positive note, ZANU PF also abandoned its traditional selection process of making supporters stand behind the leader of their choice for the secret ballot, a development that could have contributed to the downfall of some of the party's heavyweights.

Use of Public Resources

There were reports of widespread misuse of public resources for political campaigns by the ruling party. Government vehicles, offices and other ancillary services were allegedly used for political purposes. In Harare East, a City of Harare vehicle normally used for clamping badly parked cars in the city centre was allegedly used at a primary election at Courtney Selous Primary School. Harare council and community halls were also reportedly used by ZANU PF for primary elections.

The Grain Marketing Board [GMB] was reportedly used to prop up ruling party campaigns. In some provinces, GMB maize was allegedly used to entice voters to vote for some ruling party both primaries and general elections. During the solidarity marches in Harare, two motor vehicles belonging to the Chitungwiza Town Council were reportedly used to ferry ZANU PF supporters to the "Million Man" March while in Mashonaland East and Central, ZUPCO buses were reportedly used to ferry people to Harare for the solidarity marches. The farm mechanization and the subsidized Grain Marketing Board maize allocation programs have been implemented largely on a partisan basis with ruling party supporters as main beneficiaries. Operation Maguta, a government farming program coordinated by the ZNA was reportedly conducted on party lines in most provinces with reports of Gokwe Nembudziya District Administrator reportedly assuring people who had received ploughs that they would not repay the loan if the ruling party won the election while at a Unity Gala that was held at Zimbabwe Grounds in Highfield, the presenter reportedly took advantage of the occasion to urge the viewers and revellers to vote for President Mugabe in 2008.

Involvement of Security Forces

There were widespread incidents in which state operatives allegedly played partisan roles by applying the law to unlawfully to detain opposition members as well as denying them clearance to hold rallies. In Hurungwe North, the police are said to have detained two men on the 26th of February 2008 for five days, allegedly for holding a house meeting for MDC candidates. In Mashonaland provinces the police denied MDC T officials clearance to hold rallies arguing that there were inadequate police personnel to provide security.

Provincial reports generally showed that most cases reported to the police by the known or suspected MDC supporters were rarely investigated, developments that may have seen a number of cases going unreported. Prison Services Commissioner Retired General Paradzai Zimhondi that he would not salute either Tsvangirai or Simba Makoni in the event one of them won the presidential election was clearly in defiance of civil service ethics of impartiality. Such partisan and intimidatory inclinations were also manifest in most statements by Commissioner-General Augustine Chihuri.

Traditional Leaders

The role of traditional leadership in the politics of Zimbabwe continued to be controversial. Traditional leaders were reportedly playing partisan roles in the election mainly to prop up the ruling party, for instance, by directly campaigning for the ruling party with Chiefs Sogwala, Gobo, Ruya, and Ntabeni of Silobela reportedly refusing opposition rallies or party regalia in their areas. In Guruve South, a Bira Svikiro [spirit medium] reportedly urged the community to vote wisely and shun leaders that will return the country to the whites while in Mashonaland East, some chiefs and village heads reportedly urged people to vote for the ruling party if they did not wish to be evicted from their respective villages. Such reports were also made in Manicaland where Chief Chifodya of Nyanga allegedly campaigned for the ruling party while in Zaka West, kraal head Nedowa allegedly campaigned on behalf of the ruling party MP candidate and even forcing people to buy party cards. The kraal head was also reportedly the vice chairperson of ZANU PF in the area. These developments were particularly disturbing given that chiefs are mandated by Government to distribute inputs provided by government. Some traditional leaders however reportedly remained neutral, urging people to vote for candidates of their choice.

29 March Harmonized Poll

Polling

Across Zimbabwe, polling stations were reportedly opened largely without serious problems that could pose a risk to the rights of the voter. This general pattern was also applicable in both rural and urban areas. At most polling stations ballot boxes were shown to be empty to all stakeholders before they were closed and sealed.

According to ZESN observers, 85% opened without any problem, 13% had minor problems and only 2% had major problems like shortage of voting materials that affected the right of Zimbabweans to vote. Such shortages were observed at Gatche Gatche polling station in Kariba which ran out of ballot papers twice. In Harare and some parts of the country some constituencies were affected by inadequate lighting. In some cases [for instance Makoni Central] deployment of large numbers of security officers at polling stations to maintain law and order was intimidatory to the voter.

Although most polling stations visited by ZESN observers opened on time, Glenview South Constituency at Glenview 3 Primary School and DRC Shopping Centre polling station in Hwange Central Constituency opened late. At Haig Park School, Barham Green and Maphisa, some polling agents were reportedly turned away allegedly because ZEC had not accredited them. At Haig Park School, this was resolved after the intervention of MDC T senior officials.

Voting

The voting process generally took place without serious logistical hurdles although there were a number of polling stations where minor problems were reported. According to ZESN surveys voting at 71% polling stations reportedly went without any problems, 26% with minor problems while 3% had major problems. Major problems involved aspiring voters going to wrong wards, voters being turned away due to wrong identification documents [drivers' licences / photocopied

IDs], failure to produce foreign citizenship renunciation certificates or eligible voters with identification documents allegedly being turned away.

Voting problems were generally linked to inconsistencies in voters' rolls and in the application of procedures by ZEC at the various polling stations. For example, in Harare Central, voters were reportedly allowed to vote with registration certificates while in Mbare polling stations reportedly would not allow that. In Mazoe South Constituency of Sunningdale Polling Station there were some campaign materials within 100 metres. In one Mt Pleasant case, parents and children were reportedly registered in different wards and constituencies.

However incidents where polling stations ran out of ballot papers and indelible ink were generally rare with most reports pointing that voters had their names checked in the voters roll before they were permitted to vote. Voters were also closely checked for indelible ink on their fingers.

Closing of Polling Stations

ZESN observers generally agreed with the official vote count at all of the polling stations. All political party polling agents also agreed with the official vote count. At the close of poll, everyone in the queue at 1900hrs was permitted to vote. Closing of polling stations and the counting process largely took place without problems. By 30th March 2008 ZESN was encouraging the ZEC to conduct the tabulation of election results as quickly as possible. The announcement of results in a timely, transparent and accountable manner was critical in reducing tensions following an election.

ZESN Poll Projections

On 31 March, ZESN had announced the findings of an electoral observation effort using information gathered by accredited observers from a representative random sample of polling stations across the ten provinces of the country. This Sample Based Observation [SBO] is a proven methodology used worldwide to build confidence in the electoral process, reportedly used in over 20 countries including Zambia, Madagascar and Malawi. Official vote counts were collected from a representative random sample of 435 polling stations across the ten provinces of the country. The sample was stratified by province and urban/rural areas to ensure that the findings were representative.

On the basis of this, ZESN projected the MDC presidential candidate Morgan Tsvangirai receiving the highest number of votes in the 29 March 2008 presidential elections, the ruling party, Robert Gabriel Mugabe receiving the second-highest number of votes with independent candidate Simba Makoni receiving the third highest number of votes. ZESN poll projections were as below:

Presidential Poll Projections-29 March 2008 Harmonized Elections

CANDIDATE	PROJECTED % VOTE	MARGIN OF ERROR	95% CONFIDENCE INTERVAL
MAKONI, HERBERT STANLEY SIMBA	8.2%	1.1%	7.1 to 9.3
MUGABE, ROBERT GABRIEL	41.8%	2.6%	39.2 to 44.4
TOWUNGANA, LANGTON	0.6%	0.1%	0.5 to 0.7
TSVANGIRAI, MORGAN	49.4%	2.4%	47.0 to 51.8

When the presidential results were finally released on 2 May 2008, the results fall within the ZESN projections especially when the margins of error are taken into account. ZESN projections had $\pm 2.4\%$ and $\pm 2.6\%$ margins of error for Tsvangirai and Mugabe respectively.

After the announcement of the presidential results by ZEC, ZANU PF was quick to accept the results while the MDC appeared uninterested.

ZESN however could not verify the presidential results that were announced by ZEC on 2 May 2008 as the ZEC National Command Center was closed on the 6th of April and only opened on the 1st of May for tabulation of Presidential results. The fact that ZESN was not aware of the chain of custody of the ballot materials during the aforementioned period further rendered substantiation of ZEC figures impossible. What remains however clear was that the delay raised fundamental questions about the autonomy, impartiality, credibility and transparency of ZEC.

Transparency in the verification, collation and tabulation of Presidential results was highly suspect as party agents who are required by the law to be present were not invited to witness the process. The Second Schedule of the Electoral Act, section 2[2] and [3] provides that verification, collation and tabulation of constituency returns be done in the presence of candidates, their chief election agents and observers.

ZEC also failed to avail information on the final number and distribution of polling stations, distribution of postal votes, distribution of registered voters at close of inspection on 14 February 2008 which again made it difficult for the network to ascertain and analyze the overall distribution of results. However, the announcement of presidential results confirmed that ZESN projections were accurate especially when the margins of error are taken into account. ZESN projections had $\pm 2.4\%$ and $\pm 2.6\%$ margins of error for Tsvangirai and Mugabe respectively.

Under the unfolding circumstances ZESN re-emphasized the need for Zimbabwe to adhere to and implement minimum conditions set out in Southern African Development Community [SADC] Principles and Guidelines Governing Democratic Elections. As the political contenders re-gearred themselves for a second encounter, ZESN called for zero tolerance on the prevailing political violence, particularly exhorting all political leaders to denounce political violence publicly. ZESN also urged the police to act swiftly and decisively in dealing with the perpetrators in accordance with the law. Also emphasized was that the conditions prevailing prior to the 29 March poll serve as minimum requirements for the run off. Further discouraged by ZEC were any changes to the electoral legal framework through the use of the Presidentially Powers [Temporary Measures] legislation or any other instrument. Commendable reforms, particularly the posting of results outside polling stations and constituency tabulation centers should not be eroded.

An election, as many a time emphasized by ZESN, presents citizens with the opportunity to take the destiny of their nation into their hands. ZESN therefore urges all Zimbabweans who are registered to vote out in their numbers and exercise that democratic right freely. Above all, ZESN also urged the authorities to respect the will of the people of Zimbabwe.

Counting and Tabulation of Election Results

Vote counting was done at polling stations as specified in the Electoral Act. The results were recorded on a Return [V11] and then posted outside the polling station by presiding officers before they were sent to the constituency election officers. The counting, recording and posting of results were reportedly done in the presence of the candidates and their agents. Since most political parties had deployed agents at polling stations, this process ensured transparency in the counting process. However there were noted inconsistencies in the application of this legal requirement [to post result outside polling stations and constituency centers] as by 1 April, election results in Zvimba North, Zvimba West and Makonde constituencies were not posted outside as per law.

The Release of Results and Analysis

The release of the results of this election, especially Presidential Results, remains one of the most nerve-racking experiences in Zimbabwe's post independence electoral history. House of Assembly and Senatorial election results slowly trickled in while a complete information blackout was imposed on the release of presidential results. Anxiety heightened as talk of recounts emerged when presidential results had not been released two weeks after the election. The presidential results were announced on 2 May 2008, five weeks after the polls. This delay was particularly distressing given that in line with the new electoral law, election results had been posted outside polling stations at the end of polling and had since then become public information as people could simply collate them and predict the winner in the elections, scenarios that prompted celebrations [mainly by MDC winning candidates] before the official announcement of election results by ZEC. House of Assembly results were as below:

House of Assembly Results

CANDIDATE	PARLIAMENTARY SEATS
MDC T	99 SEATS
ZANU PF	97 SEATS [2 Uncontested]
MDC	10 SEATS
INDEPENDENT	1 SEAT
TOTAL NUMBER OF SEATS	207 SEATS [3 by-Elections]

For the first time in Zimbabwe's post independence electoral history, an opposition party emerged with a two-seat lead in parliament. Opposition presence in parliament was even more pronounced when the 99 MDC T seats were combined with the 10 from the breakaway MDC faction. In a democracy such a structured parliament looks set to encourage robust debates and serious scrutiny of policy enforcement.

Analysis of these parliamentary results glaringly point to visible inroads by the opposition into traditional rural strongholds of the ruling party with the ruling party losing almost 30% of its rural vote to the MDC while the opposition maintained its urban vote. Even where ZANU PF is in the majority in terms of seats spread, closer analysis of votes cast reflect threatening thin margin scenarios suggesting that ZANU PF had a big challenge in reversing the 13%-plus vote deficit to the MDC and independent candidate and win the run-off.

In Masvingo Province, 14 seats out of the 26 contested parliamentary seats were won by the MDC with ZANU PF retaining 12 pointing to another big upset for the ruling party given the history of this province as a ZANU PF stronghold. Opposition challenge was even more pronounced in the presidential results where Morgan Tsvangirai emerged with 145 198 votes against Robert Gabriel Mugabe with 156 672 votes.

In the Midlands, ZANU PF was on a clean parliamentary lead with 19 seats out of the 27 contested parliamentary seats while 8 went to the MDC. A by-Election will be conducted in Redcliff. In remote, drought-prone and rural Mberengwa [incidentally a hot spot zone], ZANU PF won with very huge margins. In fact, since independence Mberengwa has consistently remained a ZANU PF stronghold. It is however instructive to note that while ZANU PF won all seats in the 9 Gokwe constituencies, most seats were tightly contested with small margin wins.

In Manicaland Province, the MDC T emerged on the lead having won 19 of the 26 contested parliamentary seats while the ZANU PF retained the 7 rural constituencies of Buhera North, Chimanimani East, Chipinge Central, Chipinge East, Headlands, Mutare South, and Nyanga South-areas that incidentally are leading hot spot zones. It is however instructive to note that even in these 7 constituencies, ZANU PF won by very thin margins.

In Bulawayo Metropolitan Province, all the 11 contested parliamentary seats went to the opposition, MDC T while in Matebeleland North only 4 rural constituencies out of the 13 contested parliamentary seats were retained by ZANU PF leaving the opposition with 8 seats and the Tsholotsho seat falling to an independent. This pattern was also visible in presidential elections where the ruling party candidate emerged with 42 825 votes while Morgan Tsvangirai got 70 611 votes. However, it is trite to note the prevalence of voter apathy in this province. Equally important is to note that while the opposition is in the majority, ZANU PF presence is still visible in some parts of the province. Matebeleland North is still a highly contested zone with Tsholotsho a fiercely contested constituency as the ruling party is yet to stomach the painful reality of it falling in the hands of an independent, for that matter, one who rebelled from the ruling party.

As in Matebeleland North, ZANU PF remained politically visible in the rural constituencies of Matebeleland South where it won 5 of the 12 contested parliamentary seats. In metropolitan Harare which is incidentally home to the ruling party headquarters and the State House, ZANU PF retained only 1 seat in Harare South. In Mashonaland Central [incidentally a traditional no go area for the opposition] while 3 seats [Bindura South, Mazowe Central and Mazowe South] went to the opposition. However close analysis of votes spread show visible small margin scenarios.

In Mashonaland East [another traditional hot spot zone] 7 of the 34 contested parliamentary seats went to the MDC leaving ZANU PF in a comfortable lead with 27 seats, however with the thin margin scenario visibly evident. In UZUMBA, Mutoko South and Mudzi, incidentally hot beds of violence, ZANU PF won big with the Uzumba parliamentary going uncontested.

Clearly evident from these election results is that while the opposition urban support base is relatively secure, this is no longer the case for the ruling party in its traditional strongholds. The opposition challenge which in the past was largely confined to the urban areas and had given the impression that rural areas were the unchallenged political enclaves of the ruling party has since been busted. The contestation that was initially confined to urban areas has since shifted to rural areas.

Senatorial Results

CANDIDATE	SENATORIAL SEATS
MDC TSVANGIRAI	30 SEATS
ZANU PF	24 SEATS

MDC	6 SEATS
TOTAL NUMBER OF SEATS	60 SEATS

While the opposition was also in control of the house of senate, presidential appointive powers remain a concern as they deny voters their fundamental right to choose leaders of their own choice. The appointive prerogative is prone to abuse and patronage, practices that pose a major threat to transparency and good governance in electoral processes.

Local Authority Election Results

In local authorities [municipalities, town councils, and rural district councils], elections are ward-contested. Consistent with local election trends since the emergence of MDC in post 2000, all municipalities, town councils and town boards remain opposition strongholds, with the MDC generally winning almost all the seats in these wards. While ZANU PF is in the majority in most rural district wards, the ruling party hardly enjoys comfortable leads. Thin margin scenarios are manifest in RDCs, a pointer to strong opposition in-roads in the rural areas, even at local authority level. In the Matebeleland region, the opposition MDC T won virtually all seats in both rural and urban-based wards. Provincial and ward vote spread was shown as below:

Provincial and Ward Vote Spread

Access to Electoral Processes and Participation by Groups With Special Needs

914 women participated in the 29 March Elections, 118 in the House of Assembly elections, 56 in Senatorial elections, and 740 in Council elections. Of those who contested in the House of Assembly elections 30 were successful while 20 were successful at senatorial levels. It is also instructive to note that among the 16 appointed chiefs there are no women, that out of the 3 appointed senatorial seats [from a total of 5 that should be appointed], there are also no women while out of the 8 provincial Governors who have so far been appointed, only 2 are women. The net impression is that women representation is still visibly on the low side considering that women constitute 52 % of the population. No disability or special needs groups or marginalized groups were appointed in both houses of assembly.

Petitions and Recounts

Failure to agree and accept election results led to candidates filing election petitions by both MDC and ZANU PF losing candidates. In terms of Section 167 of the Electoral Act any candidate may file an election petition with the Electoral Court complaining of the undue return or election of any candidate for various reasons including corrupt illegal practices. ZANU PF was challenging results in 53 constituencies while MDC T was contesting in 52 constituencies. In its petitions, ZANU PF alleges, among other issues, that MDC bribed election officials while the MDC T on the other hand alleged that ZANU PF used vote buying tactics and intimidation resulting in voters failing to freely choose candidates of their choice. Constituencies in which petitions were filed include Mutoko South, Bindura North, Umguza, Zvimba North, Murehwa North and Masvingo.

In the wake of these petitions, the Zimbabwe Election Commission ordered a recount [of presidential, parliamentary and senatorial and local authority results] through a notice (GN 58A/2008 of 12th April stating that in terms of section 67A of the Electoral Act that the Commission was of the opinion that reasonable grounds exist for believing that a miscount of votes occurred that would have affected the result of the elections concerned. The need for these recounts was attributed to inconsistencies noted between the V11 and V23 forms submitted by election officials to the ZEC national command centre.

Recounting officially started on 19 April 2008 despite MDC efforts to block the recounting through litigation. It was disquieting to note that the exercise took place before the initial presidential results were announced and remained shrouded in secrecy and controversy in spite of calls from various stakeholders including ZESN to have the results released.

The opening of votes started late in most centers, reportedly as late as 1830hrs in areas such as Lupane. Some of the delays were reportedly caused by disputes between polling officials and MDC party agents who alleged that ballot boxes had been tampered with. Disturbing reports of inconsistencies were experienced in Chiredzi North where a total of four polling stations and a total of 184 ballots were reportedly unaccounted for.

At Chigonono Polling station, ballots for the Senate and House of Assembly reportedly ran out resulting in more ballots being cast for Local Government and Presidential elections. In the same constituency, 7 Senate ballots were reportedly discovered in the House of Assembly ballot box and another 7 House of Assembly ballots found in the Senate box. These mix ups of ballot papers, inconsistencies and differences in figures raised a lot of questions about the training capacity, competence and integrity of the polling officials in effectively running elections in a truly transparent and independent manner.

Emerging Issues on Counting of Votes

Issues of concern were identified by various stakeholders including political parties, civic organizations and the public at large. Information pertaining to the ground upon which the vote recount was ordered was reportedly sketchy as well as conflicting. The question was whether these complaints were lodged within the confines of the section 67A of the Electoral Act [section 67 A (1) and (2) of the Electoral Act] which states that a written request for the recount be submitted within 48 hours of the declaration of a candidate to be duly elected.

In respect of the presidential recount, the common view was that as there are no provisions for a presidential recount in the Electoral Act, if ZEC were to follow the practice used for recounts of parliamentary constituencies, a recount could only be ordered after the announcement of the results. Candidates would then have 48 hours within which to request for a recount on the grounds indicated in the Act.

Equally contentious was the chain of custody [storage and security] of ballot boxes and electoral material since Election Day. Section 70 of the Electoral Act states that once votes have been counted at polling stations ballot papers and related documents are placed in sealed packets and delivered to the constituency elections officer, who in turn store them in places designated by the Chief Elections Officer. It was therefore important to note the state of the election material when it was opened and whether any allegations of tampering were made.

Also at issue was the declaration of results. In GN 58A/2008, ZEC stated that after the recount the constituency elections officers would declare the new winners as the case may be, implying that this candidate would be declared duly elected, effectively ousting any winner previously declared. This was particularly disquieting as nothing in section 67A of the Electoral Act expressly provided for changing the previously declared result of an election in the event that a recount produces a different result from the original count. One interpretation is that this means that only the Electoral Court has jurisdiction to reverse a previously declared winner on the strength of a recount. The MDC had filed an urgent application in the High Court to prevent the declaration of new winners after the recount, a petition that was however rejected by the High Court.

PRESIDENTIAL RESULTS

The release of presidential results was a bone of contention for the electorate. Since 30th March 2008, ZEC had informed the electorate that presidential results would be announced in due course but before this came to pass, the electorate was baffled to hear that ZANU PF claims of election being rigged by the opposition MDC. How an opposition party could have rigged the elections has remained one of the most puzzling electoral experience. These experiences however implied that one of the contesting parties had privy to the results before ZEC announced them.

The MDC Tsvangirai filed a petition with the High Court demanding that ZEC releases presidential results while SADC convened an emergency meeting in Lusaka on Zimbabwe to resolve the unfolding crisis. The withholding of presidential elections had increased tension in Zimbabwe and exacerbated the reign of terror being experienced in rural areas. These experiences also raised lethargy and disillusionment with the efficacy of voting and the whole electoral processes in Zimbabwe.

Presidential Poll Results-29 March 2008 Harmonized Elections

CANDIDATE	NUMBER OF VOTES	ACTUAL PERCENT VOTE
MAKONI HERBERT STANLEY SIMBA	207 470	8.3%
MUGABE, ROBERT GABRIEL	1 079 730	43.2%
TOWUNGANA, LANGTON	14 503	0.6%
TSVANGIRAI MORGAN	1 195 562	47.9%
TOTAL VALID VOTES	2 497 265	100%
SPOILED BALLOTS	39 975
TOTAL VOTES CAST	2 537 240
PERCENTAGE POLL		42.7%

Since all candidates had failed to meet the 50% +1 vote requirement, the Electoral Act demanded that a Run Off be undertaken within 21 days as outlined in Section 110 of the Electoral Act.

As was manifest in parliamentary results, closer analysis of votes spread point to visible thin margin scenarios. In Mashonaland West, while out of the 255 161 total valid vote cast in the presidential elections, Robert Gabriel Mugabe won 134 750 [52.8 %] against Morgan Tsvangirai's 107 345 [42.1 %], the visibility of the opposition is very high as out of the 22 constituencies in the province, the opposition had majority votes in 9 constituencies, namely, Chegutu West, Chinhoyi, Hurungwe West, Kadoma Central, Kariba, Magunje, Mhondoro-Mubaiwa, Mhangura, and Norton. While in all the 4 Zvimba constituencies, the ruling party candidate emerged with the majority, competition is also visibly manifest, especially in Zvimba West and Zvimba East.

In Manicaland, Morgan Tsvangirai was on the lead with 212 029 votes while Robert Mugabe had 141 592 votes. In the Midlands, results reflect tight contest scenarios with Robert Mugabe winning 166 831 votes while Morgan Tsvangirai had 153 288 votes. The impression is that people who may have voted for their party candidates at parliamentary level may have switched to the MDC or independent presidential candidate. Scenarios in the Midlands province suggest that it is a ZANU PF stronghold at parliamentary level, the case is not necessarily assured at the presidential level. The presidential vote may be a pointer to possible emerging fissures within the ruling party which if not well managed could tilt the presidential vote to the opposition.

In Mashonaland East, the ruling party presidential candidate Robert Mugabe was on the lead with 160 965 votes while Morgan Tsvangirai had 119 661 votes. This trend was also manifest in Mashonaland Central where Robert Mugabe led with 157 626 votes while Tsvangirai had 75 722 votes, almost half of the ruling party presidential candidate. As was the case at parliamentary, senatorial and local election levels, in Hararre, the MDC presidential candidate emerged in the lead with 227 166 votes while Robert Gabriel Mugabe 61 215 votes, almost close to the new presidential candidate Simba Makoni who had 25 234 votes. Provincial presidential vote distribution was as below:

CHAPTER FIVE

THE RUN UP TO THE 27 JUNE PRESIDENTIAL RUN OFF

Introduction

While the run up to the 29 March 2008 harmonized elections was relatively calm, scenarios in the post election period cast an incomparable trend. Following the release of the four-week delayed presidential results on 2 May 2008, the run up to the 27 June run off degenerated into a run over leaving in its wake a trail of destruction, houses burnt down, many people displaced and homeless, orphaned and homeless children and communities torn asunder.

As chronicled in SADC and AU Election Observer Mission Reports as well as ZPP June and July 2008 Post Violence Monitoring Reports, among other reliable sources; freedom of assembly was heavily violated while opposition campaigns were under total blackout on ZTV, the opposition leadership subjected to sporadic arrests and detentions while their campaign vehicles and buses were reportedly impounded

In most rural areas, freedom of movement was severely restricted as "clearance" had to be sought even for those seeking medical attention outside. With the creation of base camps in some provinces, harassment and abuse of rural communities became widespread with rural people reportedly being asked to bring food stuff to sustain operations at these base camps while young girls provided housekeeping services.

Children were not also spared as they painfully watched their parents, sisters and brothers beaten, their family homes burnt to the ground, their teachers publicly humiliated, and their learning activities disrupted as some schools were reportedly closed and turned into base camps.

With a few weeks to the 27 June run off, evocations of war reportedly became rampant in ZANU PF campaign rallies as well as state owned print and electronic media. Campaigns by the ZANU PF presidential candidate, Robert Mugabe were awash with threats of war with statements such as "Zimbabwe was won through the bullet and not through the ballot" allegedly reiterated in ZANU PF campaign messages. The threat of post election war reverberated across the country with Major General Engelbert Rugeje, among others, reportedly quoted saying "This country came through the bullet, not the pencil. Therefore it will not go by your X [voting mark] of the pencil----" at the funeral wake of late national hero, Retired Lieutenant General Amoth Chimombe in Zaka East [Financial Gazette, June 10-25 2008].

Statistical Incidents Spread

April alone witnessed 4359 incidents of violence indicating a 470% increase in monthly recordings from pre election levels of 795 [ZPP May 2008 Report]. By May, election violence had shot up to 6288 in May with June and July records however showing election violence stubbornly retreating to 3735 and 1123 respectively. By July, a cumulative total of 17 605 incidents had been recorded. To date recorded and verified cases are as follows; 171 deaths, 9148 assaults and 16 rape cases.

Trends and Patterns of Violence

In Mashonaland East, a reign of terror was allegedly unleashed on MDC supporters at the All Souls Mission in Mutoko, a development that reportedly saw some victims seeking refuge in nearby mountains painfully watching as their homesteads were burnt to the ground and property looted while those badly injured and in need of medical care were reportedly denied access to hospitals as nurses were allegedly under instructions not to admit them.

The post era was also witness to fresh farm invasions in some parts of Masvingo, Mashonaland West and Manicaland provinces. In Masvingo, war veterans invaded Goddard Farm while in Mashonaland West a Kadoma farm belonging to Van Kirk and Cleveshay farm in Muzvezve area were also invaded. Although invaders were reportedly ordered to vacate the farm immediately, this development left the few remaining white commercial farmers living in fear of the unknown given the unpredictability of war veterans.

Cases of extortion were also reportedly rampant across the country as villagers who had “repented” of their support for the MDC T or returned to the village after elections were asked to bring a cow or goat or money as “pardon” or “returnee” fee.

Harare residents experienced increasing levels of political coercion, residents in several high density areas reportedly being frog marched to rallies and night pungwes while commuter operators were instructed to have the ruling ZANU PF candidate’s poster and T shirts. Such regalia and other party artifacts became symbols used by people for safety and protection from the youths that wrecked havoc in high density areas. Vendors in areas such as Glenview in Harare were given ZANU PF T shirts and it was compulsory to wear them to keep their market stalls. Bases have been scattered all over urban areas.

Violation of human rights extended to the denial of information to citizens as residents were reportedly asked to take down their satellite dishes in an operation code named Operation Burutsa Dish [Operation Take Down Your Satellite Dish], the rationale of this operation being that citizens were at risk of being exposed to the wrong news from outside Zimbabwe.

Towards the 27 June Run Off, invasion of privacy had reportedly scaled new heights with the “police” reportedly asking people to hand over their cell phones at roadblocks so that they would scroll through messages. This nefarious practice was reportedly prominent in Uzumba where “police” manning roadblocks were allegedly demanding from commuters cell phones so as to find out if there were any political messages in the phone.

Few weeks to the election also witnessed sporadic detentions of the MDC T presidential candidate, disruptions of MDC campaign activities and impounding of their campaign vehicles, arrest of MDC Secretary General, Tendai Biti charged with treason and the arrest of at least 10 newly elected opposition legislators on various charges, developments that were clearly in disregard of the mandate and honor which is normal accorded to an elected Member of Parliament. A convoy of British and US diplomatic staff investigating reports of election violence were reportedly stopped by a police roadblock in Bindura, the tyres of their vehicles slashed and one of their drivers hauled from one of their diplomatic cars and beaten up.

Harassment of Rights Defenders

Human Rights NGOs also bore the brunt of retributive violence. There was widespread harassment of human rights lawyers, journalists and others who were thought to be either sympathetic to the opposition or did not give adequate coverage to the ruling party.

At the national public broadcaster, seven senior journalists were reportedly sent on forced leave, their suspension occurring amid earlier reports that ZANU PF had demanded a total monopoly of the radio and television airwaves in the run-up to the poll. The decision also came hard on the heels of the sacking of ZBC's chief executive, Henry Muradzikwa, for allegedly failing to provide sufficient support for ZANU PF's campaign in the March 29 elections, and defying ministerial orders to deny the MDC favorable coverage.

Also disquieting was the decision to suspend PVO and NGO field operations in a circular dated 4 June 2008, a suspension effected allegedly because organizations were breaching the terms and conditions of their registration. This clamp down on civil society involvement in politics has unfortunately shifted the focus of civil society from their humanitarian mandates as they grappled with survival issues at a time when the need is at its most. Civil society offices were raided, lawyers fled while journalists were raided.

ZESN under Siege

ZESN also came under fire, accused of rigging elections and working in cohorts with MDC. Incidentally since the time ZESN announced projections for the presidential election on 31 March 2008 which had clearly showed Morgan Tsvangirai securing more votes than Robert Gabriel Mugabe, its members, staff, management and leadership reportedly became subject to a campaign of intimidation by the government. For the 29 March Election, the Minister of Justice, Parliamentary and Legal Affairs approved ZESN accreditation of 11 808 observers and 8 667 observers were duly accredited by the ZEC. Furthermore, ZESN observers had also received training and signed a code of conduct which bound them to conduct themselves in a partisan manner.

Following the outcome of the Senate and House of Assembly results as well as speculations around presidential results, a number of ZESN observers were reportedly beaten while some had their houses torched. Among those victimized was the ZESN Director, Rindai Chipfunde-Vava who was detained for 45 minutes at the Harare International Airport on 15th April 2008. ZESN National offices were also raided by the police on 25 April 2008 allegedly searching for subversive material that would be used to unseat the government unconstitutionally. The police reportedly ordered all staff members to vacate their offices, sit in the boardroom and comply with their requests like giving passwords for computers, unlocking all offices and providing information they needed. After a thorough perusal of ZESN Documents, files and scanning of computers, the police confiscated a number of ZESN documents. They also took its program Manager who was subsequently detained at Harare Central Police Station for 6 hours by police for questioning. The home of ZESN's National Director was also raided by the police on 25th of April while ZESN's Chairperson, Noel Kututwa and the National Director were required for three days running from [28 to 30 April 2008] to make themselves available at Harare Central Police Station to answer questions and furnish the police with statement explaining a number of issues. The two were also questioned extensively specifically on ZESN election monitoring and observation of 28 March 2008 Harmonized Elections. Particular focus was on the Network's projections of the presidential results. Police further requested the two to provide written statements of ZESN's voter education program explaining their duties and roles, ZESN's relations with ZEC before, during and after the election, ZESN's relationship with the National Democratic Institute [NDI] and also ZESN's financial statements and vouchers, actual number of ZESN accredited observers, its establishment and funding partners amongst a plethora of other things.

Various statements were subsequently made by politicians and members of ZANU PF, including Patrick Chinamasa and Emmerson Mnangagwa, alleging that ZESN is a pro-MDC organization and was used by to bribe ZEC officials during the 29 March 2008 harmonized elections as well as campaigning for the opposition under the guise of voter education, allegations vehemently rejected by ZESN as unfounded and bent on discrediting and intimidating ZESN. ZESN links these attacks to the announcement of projections of the presidential election results on 31 March 2008 projecting that Morgan Tsvangirai securing more votes than Robert Mugabe, although ZEC's presidential results fall within ZESN'S projected percentages and margins of error.

On 17 April 2008, the home of ZESN observer in Chahwanda area in Mt Darwin was allegedly torched by a known ex-officer of Kasoso village while a vehicle belonging to ZESN was reportedly confiscated by ZANU PF supporters at Kotwa centre on 13 May 2008. The vehicle, a Toyota land cruiser had been deployed by ZESN to go and rescue three of its observers who had been seriously beaten by suspected ZANU PF supporters and needed urgent assistance.

By the time of the run- off, one death recorded of ZESN observer Elliot Machipisisa of Hurungwe, 74 ZESN observers had moved in with relatives, 113 had been displaced and had sought and got assistance in Harare, 12 had been assaulted, 16 had their homes burnt, 4 had their property damaged while 71 were reported harassed and intimidated.

Use of State Resources

Use of state resources for campaigning purposes was reportedly widespread. GMB played an active role in ZANU PF campaigns. The distribution of maize from GMB and farm implements was increased giving unfair advantage to the incumbent as distribution was generally done at ruling party rallies. Government vehicles and other facilities were also used by ZANU PF to campaign while the same privilege was not awarded to the MDC, further making the electoral terrain very uneven.

Voter and Civic Education

In contrast to the run up to the 29 March election there was no active voter and civic education weeks after the announcement of the un-off date. ZEC is mandated with the provision of voter education and determines who can provide voter education. There was need to educate people on what was happening, why there was need for a second round of presidential elections. Voter and civic education are critical if the electorate were to make informed choices and hence should be taken seriously.

A number of questions have remained unanswered because of the absence of voter education. Particularly in need of explanation were how the procedures for the run-off differed from those of the 29 March election, whether there was going to be a new voters' roll, whether voters who had initially registered for the 29 March election were the only one to vote in the run-off, whether voting was to be ward- based or national, whether votes were to be counted at polling stations immediately after the closing of the poll and the results posted outside polling stations for public information [using form V.11]. For instance, the public only got to know very late that the procedures governing the two elections were the same, and that only registered voters were eligible to vote, that voting was ward based.

Accreditation of International and Local Observers and Journalists

International Observers

The exercise was conducted by ZEC and commenced at the Harare and Bulawayo Polytechnics on the 2nd of June. Despite an earlier statement that international observers who observed the 29 March election did not need a new invitation from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, all international and regional observers were accredited again. International observers accredited for the run off were the Pan African Parliament and SADC Observer Team, UCF, AU and ECOWAS. SADC increased its observers from 200 to 413. The MDC T expressed disappointment in the SADC team which had declared that it had not received reports of violence. The team visited politically volatile areas with views to collect information and observe electoral processes in the country's ten provinces within the 210 constituencies.

A United Nations envoy sent to Zimbabwe to investigate the unrest in the country arrived on the 16th of June 2008 and began talks with the various stakeholders in the election. However the UN presence was discredited in state media particularly the Herald as a mere formality, which would not have any effect. Other observer mission such as the Pan African Parliament [PAP] began their mission on the 14th of June with an 18 member team African Union [AU] deployed its observer team on the 15th of June 2008 and ECOWAS had presence in the country to observe the run-off.

Local Observers

Local observers were required to apply for an invitation from the Minister of Justice before seeking accreditation. Up to 11 June, only international and regional observers and the media had been accredited. The late invitation of civil society organizations had a negative impact on the invitation of observers, their accreditation and deployment. However ZEC's decision to scale down the numbers of local observers that were placed by the Minister of Justice Legal and Parliamentary Affairs was a disturbing development.

Twenty days before the 27 June run-off, most local observers had not received invitations for accreditation. Limits were placed on the number of people that ZESN could field to the ministry for accreditation, the number effectively reduced from over 8667 in the harmonized election to 500 in the presidential run-off, a development that posed a serious risk to the ability of civil society to monitor and observe elections in order to identify anomalies in the electoral process especially on polling day. Since ZEC had reportedly published polling stations in excess of 9231, this warranted more observers as the Electoral Act provided for 2 election observers per organization per polling station, a situation which would amount to the accreditation of 27 000 observers. These deliberate late invitations prevented local observers to monitor the initial stages of the electoral processes such as postal ballots and the closing of postal ballots. Also questionable was why the accreditation of foreign observer missions was extended while the same privilege was denied to local observers. As a result ZESN did not field any accredited observers for the run off.

The National Multi-Party Liaison Committee was set up by ZEC and composed of two major political parties and a declaration condemning political violence was drawn up and signed by the two main political parties. ZEC increased the number of candidates' election agents permitted inside each polling station from one to two per candidate, a development that could have enhanced the legitimacy of the election. Training of 64 000 constituency election officers continued up to the 22nd June with the ZEC Committee on Media Monitoring stating that it would continue to monitor election coverage by the media according to Section 16G of the ZEC Act which obliges ZEC to carry out such monitoring to ensure that parties, candidates, and broadcasters, print publishers and journalists observe the fair coverage provisions of the ZEC Act and regulations. However, it was disturbing to note that although media coverage and reporting was heavily biased in favor of the incumbent, ZEC neither publicly condemned the act or take serious measures to curb the act.

Election Administration

Sound election administration is a critical in building political party confidence in the conduct of elections. ZEC set up 9232 polling stations and engaged more than 64000 polling officers to monitor the June 27 presidential run-off and three house of assembly by-election. However, ZEC, the body that runs elections in Zimbabwe only began voter education on radio at the end of the week ending 20 June. ZEC also depends on the personnel of other government departments to carry out its electoral processes on polling day reportedly recruited 64 000 staff. In previous elections it had relied on civil servants especially teachers to carry out these functions. Alleged use of youth militias and war veterans by ZEC as polling officers and presiding officers in the 27 June elections could have seriously compromised the secrecy of the ballot box as their neutrality was highly questionable.

Also at issue is the independence and neutrality of ZEC and its ability to work without being influenced by political parties. It is vital for an election commission to be impartial and to instill the confidence of the electorate, political parties and civic society. Calls for the reconstitution of ZEC were commonly heard from most stakeholders and observers.

ZEC has not been more forthcoming as to the progress that has been made with regard to the preparations of the run-off. In addition, the institution did not give the public information on the number of ballot papers they had printed and distribution pattern.

Media Coverage of Political Parties

Media plays a pivotal role in the democratization of elections informing the public of what politicians are offering in terms of their plans, programs and policies. However in its analysis of political party media coverage, the Media Monitoring Project of Zimbabwe [MMPZ] established that in Zimbabwe, the ethics of good journalism have been violated as reporting on election issues was done in a partisan way that exposes the orientations of the reporters. The public has not been allowed to form their own political opinions based solely on the political candidate's submissions. The print media in Zimbabwe have not been able to establish and maintain contact with rural communities yet these are the areas that need more explanation on political programs. The role of the media is to expose violations, investigate allegations of electoral fraud, to be balanced and neutral. While ZEC has a media monitoring department that is mandated to ensure that all parties to an election are able to access state owned media without discrimination and ensuring equality of opportunity, this proved to be moribund as only ZANU PF campaign messages have been advertised.

Voice Distribution on ZBC

As further revealed by MMPZ, voice distribution on state owned media in the week before the election from 22nd of June to the 27th of June 2008 was as follows: ZANU PF [101%], Government [19%], ZEC [6%], War Veterans [9%], and, ZRP [26%]. Since ZBC is the sole source of news to most Zimbabweans and denying, the MDC T access to public media denies them an opportunity to sell themselves to the people. This also denies the electorate an opportunity to make informed choices on the candidates.

Vote Distribution in Government Press

In its analysis of voice Distribution in government press a week before the election, MISA findings were as follows: Diplomats [20%], ZANU PF [41%], ZRP [14%], MDC [8%] and government [8%]. While the MDC T has been written about in government press, it is interesting to note that all the publicity in government press has been very negative. MDC T has been portrayed as “violent thugs”, “puppets of the west” and other such negative insinuations. All media coverage for the MDC T on state owned print and electronic media has been negative. State media coverage was heavily skewed in favor of ZANU PF.

Voice Distribution in the Private Media

MMPZ analysis of voice distribution in the private media revealed ZANU PF with 34%, diplomats with 7%, MDC with 26%, ZRP with 9%, ZEC with 1%] while other parties had 3% coverage. MDC T received more coverage in private papers yet these are not accessed by most of the public due to prohibitive costs and unavailability. For many Zimbabweans, external broadcasters provided more reliable news than the highly polarized state owned media.

Withdrawal of the MDC Presidential Candidate

On the 21st of June 2008, MDC T announced that it was considering withdrawing from the race as a result of the uneven electoral playing field. The MDC T presidential aspirant had been detained five times in a space of two weeks, MDC Secretary General Tendai Biti detained while campaign buses and vehicles were impounded effectively rendering the campaign impossible. The police explained that the detentions of the MDC presidential candidate as security or routine checks. The pronouncement to withdraw was met by the ZANU PF candidate with cynicism as an attempt to discredit the election, which ZANU PF alleged it was sure to win.

On 22 June 2008, the MDC presidential candidate officially withdrew from the presidential race after disruptions of his rally by armed forces and suspected ZANU PF supporters, which he was scheduled to hold in Harare on the date in question. The youth militias barred people from attending the rally, threatening unspecified actions.

This decision generated mixed reviews however with the bulk generally sympathetic with the MDC decision which they described as prudent in the face of the orgy of retributive violence that had been unleashed on his supporters. Some supporters however felt betrayed and abandoned, mostly in view of the retribution visited upon them. To ZEC, the government of Zimbabwe and ZANU PF, the MDC T presidential candidate remained officially in the race despite his written withdrawal submission alleging that his withdrawal was unlawful and therefore not effective. There was a legal debate that ensued as some legal minds held that the withdrawal was legal as 21 day period referred to the 1st round of elections and not the run-off, some argued that the MDC T participation was automatic since they had participated in the first round of elections.

Calls for the Postponement of the Run Off

A week before the 27 June Election, the South African President [who is the commissioned SADC mediator between ZANU PF and MDC] had flown into the country in a bid to postpone the election, exhorting the two political actors to go for a Government of National Unity [GNU], a proposal that was however rejected by ZANU PF arguing that they were only amenable to negotiations after the poll.

South African ruling ANC president Jacob Zuma had also called for the postponement of elections saying "the run-off is no longer a solution, you need a political arrangement first and then elections down the line" while former South African President Nelson Mandela had also described the run up scenarios as "tragic failure of leadership". The Government of Botswana had also issued a threat not to recognize the ZANU PF presidential candidate as the legitimate leader of Zimbabwe.

The SADC chairperson Levy Mwanawasa also called for the postponement of elections to avert what he called a "regional catastrophe", sentiments that were also echoed by the SADC Organ on Politics, Defence and Security, the UN Security Council and Western governments. Two members of the Troika organ, Tanzanian President Jakaya Kikwete and King Mswati of Swaziland had met in Mbabane, Swaziland and issued a communique "that it is the considered opinion of the organ summit that holding the election under the current circumstances may undermine the credibility and legitimacy of its outcome", views which were also shared by Jean Ping, the Chairman of the African Union Commission who had said "This development [Tsvangirai's withdrawal] and the increasing acts of violence in the run-up to the second round of the presidential election are a matter of grave concern to the Commission of the AU".

Amid this cacophony of condemnation from regional peers and international civic groups and the United Nations, the Government of Zimbabwe had pushed ahead with the Election ridiculing those criticizing the decision to go ahead with the poll as "making idiotic noises that would not bother us".

CHAPTER SIX

THE 27 JUNE PRESIDENTIAL RUN OFF

The Electoral Framework

Every election is governed by electoral laws that provide the parameters for the conduct of elections. While in the case of the June presidential run-off the law provided that the procedures that governed the conduct of the Harmonized Election still hold for the June 27 Presidential poll, some changes, modifications were introduced with regard to some procedures such as V11 and V23 forms and the number of polling stations. According to statutory instrument 82A of 2008, V11 and V23 forms were now to be signed by the presiding officer and ward election officers respectively in the presence of candidates or their election agents. Party agents were also to sign as witnesses, all parties agreeing before signing the forms. V11 forms were to be signed at the polling station while V23 forms were to be signed at ward level.

Changes were also made with regard to the allocation of polling stations per province, some provinces receiving substantial increases while others were reduced. However, as shown below, there were more of increases than decreases.

By-Elections

The nomination court was convened on the 30th May 2008 to consider nomination papers for the three constituencies that were due for by-elections, namely Redcliff, Gwanda South and Pelandaba-Mpopoma. Nomination court proceedings reportedly progressed without any major logistical hiccups, however with some candidates disqualified on the basis of not being registered in the constituency while Paul Siwela, an independent candidate who had filed papers for the March 29 poll withdrew his candidature for unspecified reasons. Also noticeable were names new candidates who initially had not filed for the March 29 poll by-Elections. The by-Election profile was as shown below:

By- Election Candidates and Contested Constituencies

CONSTITUENCY	CANDIDATE NAME	POLITICAL PARTY
REDCLIFF	Sengweni Tapera Isheunesu Muza Aaron Chenhara Karigamombe Girimond	MDC T ZANU PF MDC T MDC
GWANDA SOUTH	Orders Mlilo Nephat Mdhlongwa Elizabeth Ndhlovu	ZANU PF MDC T MDC
PELANDABA-MPOPOMA	Sikhanyiso Duke Ndhlovu Dumani Gweru Samuel Khumalo Samuel Mahlamvana Ndhlovu Chamunorwa Mahachi Leornard Nkala Job Sibanda Fungai Mutukwa	ZANU PF MDC MDC T UPP ZDP PUMA INDEPENDENT INDEPENDENT

Interestingly, the MDC-T proceeded to field two candidates in Redcliff despite the fact that this had cost the party a number of seats in the March 29 polls. ZANU PF emerged with two seats in the Gwanda and Redcliff constituencies, the MDC T with 1 seat in the Pelandaba-Mpopoma constituency. The by-election outcome may have been influenced by confusion surrounding the withdrawal of the MDC presidential candidate, double candidature, split between the two MDC factions as well as the general climate of retribution and fear that prevailed during this election.

Polling Day Scenarios

While the polling day projected a seemingly calm atmosphere, beneath this façade of calmness was a noticeable voter intimidation characterized by the ordering of voters to record the serial numbers on their ballot papers and later submit that information to functionaries of the ruling ZANU PF. In rural polling stations, Chiefs/Headman were reportedly used to record the names of their subjects who were then required, against their will, to go and queue behind their chief/headmen on voting day and vote in a pre-determined sequence and in the process creating an unfortunate impression to the voters that they could be detected if they did not vote for ZANU PF.

According to the 251 ZESN short term observers [STOs] and 210 long term observers [LTOs] who had been deployed in the 210 constituencies, the forcing of people to go to polling stations and voting for the ruling party candidate was the main incident. The threats and strategies that were crafted in the run up to ensure that all voters comply and vote for the ZANU PF presidential candidate were reportedly followed to the letter, voters under specific instruction to bring the serial numbers of their ballot papers, suspected and known opposition supporters ordered to profess illiteracy even if they could write, as well as registering their names with ZANU PF officials after voting.

Incidents of intimidation and harassment within and around the polling stations were more widespread in Manicaland, Mashonaland Central and Mashonaland East and entailing placing of a gun on a table within one polling station or telling people where to place their vote as they entered polling stations.

Analysis of 27 June Poll Results

Interestingly, the haste with which the 27 June presidential poll results were processed and released cast a sharp contrast to the 29 March presidential poll. While it had taken 6 weeks to process and release the results of the March elections, the results were announced within 24 hours of polling and within 24 hours of the election, the winner, ruling party presidential candidate Robert Mugabe inaugurated and in the evening leaving for the African Union Summit in Egypt scheduled to begin on the 1st of July 2008.

The Spoilt Ballot Vote Phenomenon

Polling results were characterized by an extraordinarily high number of spoilt ballot papers with some reportedly carrying insulting language. Most spoiled papers were recorded in urban areas and incidentally in some of the provinces in which the MDC T had performed well in the March Harmonized Elections.

According to the SADC Election Observer Mission, some spoiled ballot papers had expressions like God bless the country, Let there be free and fair elections, No to dictatorship, statements that reflect general dissatisfaction with the way the elections were conducted. In some instances, voters reportedly crossed the boxes for both presidential candidates and added the message that the two should govern the country together. Most of the hate messages were reportedly directed at the ZANU PF presidential candidate. When compared with the 29 March poll as shown below, the 27 June results cast an incomparable contrast.

In the March elections Tsvangirai polled 1 195 562 votes against Mugabe's 1079 730 while in the June Elections the opposition candidate got a paltry 233 000 votes compared to the 2 150 269 votes won by the ruling party candidate, a gap which was somehow unusual given the performance of the MDC candidate in the March poll. 131 481 spoiled ballot papers were recorded in the June Run Off compared to the 39 975 ballot papers spoiled in the 29 March Elections, again showing a disturbing increase in spoilt ballots.

Provincial spread of spoilt ballots showed Harare with the highest number of 36 547, Midlands as second with 19 438 spoilt ballots, Manicaland third with 17 525, Mashonaland West fourth with 10 821, Matebeleland North fifth with 9 907, Masvingo 9 740, Bulawayo 9 166, Mashonaland East 7 675, Matebeleland South 7 353 and Mashonaland Central with the lowest 3 409.

Statistical spread also reflect significant drop in Tsvangirai's votes in some of the provinces in which he had performed well in the March Elections, examples being Harare where Tsvangirai had 220 160 votes in March and 48 307 in June, Mashonaland East where Tsvangirai polled 4 066 in June compared to the 119 661 votes he won in the March Election. This unusual trend was also reflected in Bulawayo and Mashonaland West.

Voter turnout was recorded as 42, 37% compared to 42.7% for March 29th 2008. There were also significant changes in the voting patterns especially in the provinces that recorded massive political violence and intimidation. In provinces that experienced a lot of violence [Mashonaland Central], the number of spoilt ballots was significantly low pointing to possible guided voting.

All in all, the unusually high number of "spoilt ballot" papers and the "unpalatable messages" reflect features of a ballot protest. It is like the Zimbabwean electorate was angrily hitting back or communicating a message or venting their frustrations through the ballot paper. Several interpretations emerge from these scenarios. Could it have been a protest against Tsvangirai's pull out from the run off [given the retribution they had suffered in his name] or a protest against Mugabe [given that most derogatory messages were reportedly directed against him]? These voters may have used the ballot as a way of protesting against ZANU PF intimidation and retribution. For this spoiling the ballot paper was silent resistance in action. For those directing their anger at Tsvangirai, it could have been due to disappointment with his decision to pull out, a not so far- fetched possibility given the mixed reaction to his withdrawal. For these people, the withdrawal amounted to being abandoned by a leader in the pitch of a battle.

Reviews of the 27 June Presidential Run Off

The 27 June Election drew extensive condemnation, regionally and internationally. The SADC Election Observer Mission [SEOM Report expressed concern that that "the prevailing environment impinged on the credibility of the electoral process" and on the basis of these findings concluded that the "election did not represent the will of the people of Zimbabwe".

The Pan-African Parliament Election Observer Mission Report, after highlighting its grave concern on countrywide traces of politically motivated violence, underlined that "the current atmosphere prevailing in the country did not give rise to the conduct of free, fair and credible elections" and urged that "conditions should be put in place for holding of free, fair, and credible elections as soon as possible in line with the African Union Declaration on the Principles Governing Democratic Elections". The Report went on to urge the SADC leaders working together with the AU to engage the broader political leadership in Zimbabwe into a “negotiated transitional settlement”.

The Botswana Observer Team roundly condemned the election before concluding that “the Presidential run-off was not free and fair, did not express the will of the people of Zimbabwe”. The Government of Botswana openly called for the expulsion of Zimbabwe from the SADC and the AU adding that it does not recognize the leadership in Zimbabwe while the African National Congress youth league Chairman Julius Malema called it “a joke of the worst order”.

The Group of Eminent African leaders that include Nelson Mandela also expressed visible disquiet on the conduct of elections, generally describing the election as illegitimate and in fact a dark patchy in Africa’s electoral history. However, the manner in which some African leaders reacted to the election led to the questioning of the relevance and utility of the SADC protocols and guidelines governing the conduct of elections in Southern Africa. It seems that SADC leaders signed and ratified the principles governing the conduct of election as lip service but are reluctant to enforce them in their respective countries as demonstrated by the Zimbabwean case where the SADC principles were blatantly violated.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Electoral Environment

While the pre 29 March election political environment was relatively calm with evident semblance of political tolerance to the campaigns by different parties in both rural and urban areas, scenarios in the run up to the 27 June Presidential run- off cast an incomparable trend.

The electoral environment was generally tense with countrywide restrictions on freedom of assembly and freedom of movement. Rural areas were virtually sealed off from opposition rallies, the opposition leadership subjected to sporadic arrests and detentions, and their campaign vehicles and buses reportedly impounded.

Holding of rallies was a preserve of the ruling ZANU-PF, whilst the MDC-T political rallies were reportedly systematically disrupted by the ZANU PF militia and youth, mostly with the police as passive witnesses. Liberation-war style bases were set up throughout the country where those known or suspected to be in opposition politics went through a "political re-orientation" program.

Hate speech, incitement of violence, and threats of war characterized electoral campaigns-with the ruling party presidential candidate threatening to go back to war if he lost the election to the MDC presidential candidate, whom he considered a puppet of the West. All in all, the political environment resembled that of a country in a civil war.

Politically motivated violence escalated in the post election era to an overall figure of 17 605 by July with an incident spread of 171 cases of murder, 16 cases of rape, 9 148 cases of assaults, 827 cases of MDPs, 352 of torture, 9590 of harassment, 2165 of displacement and 137 of discriminations. Perpetrators of violence were reportedly making brisk capital out of the political plight of their victims through charging fees such as returnee fee, pardon fee, registration fees, among others. Zesn advocates for zero tolerance of violence and the application of principles and the law on everyone alike.

Election reviews by SADC Election Observer Mission [SEOM], the Pan-African Parliament Observer Mission, the African Union Observer Mission, and the Botswana Observer Team strongly suggest an election that was grossly flawed in both process and outcome. It was described as an election marred by politically motivated violence, overwhelming lack of access to the public media by the opposition, restrictions on accreditation of local observers, politicization of security forces, and gross lack of respect for the electoral process, among other vices. The Pan African Parliament Observer Mission concluded that the atmosphere prevailing in the country did not give rise to the conduct of free, fair and credible elections and exhorted that conditions should be put in place for the holding of free, fair and credible elections in line with the African Union Declaration on the Principles Governing Democratic Elections. The SADC Observer Mission concluded that the elections did not conform to SADC Principles, that the prevailing environment impinged on the credibility of the electoral process and was therefore did not represent the will of the people while the AU Observer Mission concluded that the Election process fell short of accepted AU standards and urged both parties to engage in constructive dialogue. The Botswana Observer Team concluded that the credibility and integrity of the election process was compromised, and not free and fair and does not represent the will of the people of Zimbabwe.

Observations by local, regional and international observers are consistent with the pre and post election monitoring and observation findings by ZESN. The election outcome does not reflect the will of Zimbabweans and neither does it meet regional and international standards.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Electoral Architecture

Legal Framework

While some amendments were made to the Electoral Act in the pre 29 March era [for instance, those requiring posting of election results outside polling stations and constituency tabulation centers] and other relevant pieces of legislation such as POSA, AIPPA and the Broadcasting Act- these reforms were however piecemeal rather than comprehensive and also enacted without much citizen input. Furthermore, there was a reversal to some of the reforms made on the eve of the 29 March Election through a presidential proclamation. A case in point was the reversal of the reform requiring police officers to be stationed 100ms from polling stations. Such changes to the electoral legal framework through the use of the Presidential Powers [Temporary Measures] legislation or any other instrument must be discouraged.

Election Systems

While Zimbabwe continues to conduct its elections within the Westminster system of first past the post [FPTP] based on the “winner- take-all” model, the unfolding political and leadership challenges in Zimbabwe can hardly be solved through such winner-take all, zero sum frameworks. Besides being exclusionary, they generate tension in an environment already pregnant with tension and agitation. The solution to the political stalemate in Zimbabwe lies in an electoral paradigmatic shift to more inclusive, accomodating, win-win electoral systems based on proportional representation and mixed electoral systems.

Election Administration

Sound election administration is a critical in building political party confidence in the conduct of elections. ZEC set up 9232 polling stations and engaged more than 64000 polling officers to monitor the June 27 presidential run-off and three house of assembly by-election.

However, the delays that accompanied the release of election results, especially presidential results, do not reflect positively on ZEC’s election management capacity and autonomy. Its management of the delimitation, nomination, voter education, voter registration and inspection processes particularly raised concern. Information on the delimitation exercise was not adequately provided. The public and parliamentarians were not given adequate time to debate and make inputs in the exercise. Delays in the delimitation of boundaries [constituencies and wards] saw voter registration and inspections and setting of the nomination date being done before the finalization of the delimitation exercise.

ZEC also overly depends on the personnel of other government departments to carry out its electoral processes on polling day. In the run up to the 27 June elections ZEC had reportedly relied on civil servants especially teachers to carry out these functions. Alleged use of youth militias and war veterans by ZEC as polling officers and presiding officers in the 27 June elections could have seriously compromised the secrecy of the ballot box as their neutrality was highly questionable.

Its independence, neutrality and ability to work without being influenced by political parties is highly suspect. It is vital for an election commission to be impartial and to instill the confidence of the electorate, political parties and civic society. ZEC obviously needs calls an urgent institutional surgery and complete overhaul.

ZESN therefore recommends that an independent and more professional Election Management Body be established to run elections. The body must be politically independent, efficient and dedicated to ensuring that elections are held in accordance with the law. The importance of the impartiality, all-inclusiveness, competence and accountability of the Body is emphasized. The method of appointment of Commissioners should be changed to reassure political parties and the electorate that Commissioners will be impartial. The Body should be appointed with the participation of opposition parties and key stakeholders. The selection process of commissioners should be transparent and engender confidence in all stakeholders. These selection processes should also ensure that gender, special needs groups and youth participation or representation is achieved.

Adequate and qualified personnel should also staff the Body. It is necessary to ensure the independence of the Body including financial autonomy. Commissioners could each be given areas of responsibility to enhance accountability. The law could require the commissioners to divide among themselves responsibility for the Commission's different activities so that each commissioner would be responsible for a particular activity and in this way promote equal participation by all Commissioners. An alternative way of distributing functions between Commissioners would be to give each Commissioner the responsibility for a particular province.

Electoral Operations

Voter Registration and Inspection of the Voters' Roll

While a number of changes were made for instance, that voters should simply produce "any satisfactory documentary evidence reasonably proving where they live" was a restrictive requirement, the voter registration exercise was hampered by a number of logistical problems, namely that the exercise started late, that some inspection centers lacked adequate stationery, that in some cases, insufficient and incorrect information was provided to citizens about the registration process, that little time was allocated for the inspection of the voters roll, that in some cases, upon registration, some potential voters were not provided with registration slips [green passes], and that in some cases conflicting information was provided on documents required to enable one to register as a voter. To improve voter registration and inspection in future elections, it is recommend that:

- Voter registration should be approached as an ongoing process.
- Stringent requirements which discourage and disable people from registering as voters should be done away with.
- The voter registration exercise should be sufficiently publicized to ensure that every citizen who desires to participate in elections is able to do so.
- Adequate resources [time, human and financial] should be allocated towards the voter registration exercise to enable ZEC undertake its voter registration mandates.

- The number of polling stations in urban areas should be increased to allow for adequate and equitable access to the polls.
- ZEC ensure that all voters registered during the inspection period as well as during the mobile voter registration exercises are urgently issued with voter registration certificates so that they are not disenfranchised.
- There should be a complete transfer of the management of the electoral process including preparing of the voters' roll to the ZEC. This should not only be in the law but also in practice.
- The Registrar General and the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission should play a more pro-active role to ensure that every eligible voter is registered instead of making the process slow and frustrating for aspiring voters.
- The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission should ensure that the Registrar General assigns full-time staff to register all aspiring voters at all his offices countrywide.

Voter Education

While the Electoral Act obliges ZEC to conduct voter education and also clearly states that the "the Commission must commence a program of voter education not later than 90 days before the polling day of an election", voter education started late with reports of "little voter education" having been conducted by ZEC by the time of elections. Voter education efforts were also compromised by resource constraints, inadequate training of voter educators, insufficient or incorrect information on the electoral process [especially, the delimitation exercise], the manner in which the harmonized elections would be conducted, the practical implication on the voter of having four elections in one day, the number of ballot boxes, the number and color coding of ballot papers, as well as contradictory information on how voters requiring assistance would be treated. For instance, some cases ZEC brochures reportedly stated that proof of residence would be required on polling day, in addition to identification documents- misleading information that caused undue alarm as prospective voters given the challenges experienced in securing proof of residence. This was against the background that ZESN was refused permission by ZEC to provide supplementary voter education. To strengthen the voter registration exercise, it is recommended that:

- In future ZEC avail adequate resources for voter education.
- Adequate monitoring mechanisms should be put in place to ensure that voter education is conducted in a uniform, professional and non-partisan manner.
- A comprehensive voter education and information exercise should be conducted in order to reduce cases of voters going to wrong polling stations or wards on voting day.
- More space should be given to NGOs to provide gap filling voter education. This is particularly critically given ZEC's apparent lack of continuity to undertake the exercise in all provinces.

Delimitation

While a new delimitation exercise was conducted in advance of the 29 March 2008 Election, there was insufficient time for people to participate in the process. A preliminary Delimitation Report was not tabled as envisioned in the law, to provide an opportunity for formal input by the political parties. The final Delimitation Report was tabled in Parliament very late in the electoral process. This left little time to educate the public on changes to ward and constituency [House of Assembly and Senate] boundaries. It also caused confusion for the nomination process within political parties, in some cases forcing re-runs of some primaries. Parliamentarians were not given adequate opportunity to debate the Delimitation report and make any recommendations for changes to the setting of constituency boundaries. Failure to allow this debate and to hear the recommendations of the parliamentarians flies in the face of the letter and spirit of the constitutional provisions. In future, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission which is now responsible for delimiting constituencies and other electoral boundaries must be obliged to give public notice before embarking on a delimitation exercise and “so far as is practicable within the time available” entertain representations from political parties and other interested parties who are likely to be affected by its decisions, stick to universal principles of representatives, equal voting strength and serviceability, independence and professionalism.

Nominations

While nomination processes were largely transparent, there are concerns with multiple candidates from same political parties attempting to file nomination papers, developments that resulted in sporadic intra-party violence at nomination courts. Nomination papers were rejected or disqualified due among other factors to, inadequate papers, candidates being nominated by persons who are not registered as voters, the prospective candidate's name not appearing on the voters' roll or on the basis that the candidate was alien. Problems also arose from the use of a manual system [use of hard copies of the voters' rolls to verify registration of candidates and supporters], limited use of computers, and use of small, often cramped venues as nomination courts invariably limited public access to the nomination process. To strengthen nomination processes and practices, it is recommended that:

- In order to avoid that disappointment of failing to lodge their papers, prospective candidates should ensure that their papers are in order well in advance. The provisions of the law, which allow filing of papers before nomination day, could also be used.
- Political parties should also ensure that their candidates have the correct particulars that qualify them as candidates so that rejection of nomination papers on clearly justifiable grounds is reduced.
- Adequate funding should be allocated to Electoral Commission to ensure efficient management of nomination processes.
- ZEC should ensure that citizens receive relevant education of the electoral process to enable them to exercise rights such as standing for election.
- Adequate information should be disseminated on the requirements of candidates for all contested seats to be done in time to reduce rejection of nomination papers.
- Timeous availability of information on ward and constituency boundaries so that nominees are identified from the correct wards and constituencies.
- Adequate dissemination of voter information so that prospective candidates know the actual venues of the nomination courts.
- Uniform, collective and timeous announcement of nominated candidates to avoid speculative reporting by the media and other stakeholders.

Access to State Media

While the pre-29 March era witnessed some visible effort to allow advertisements and air time to different political parties on state controlled radio and television stations [though late and still biased in favor of the ruling party], the post era cast an incomparable contrast. Contrary to provisions in Section 3 of the Electoral Act to ensure that there was “reasonable access to the media” by both parties, the state media prominently featured ruling party political advertisements and messages to the total exclusion of MDC T. In those few instances where reference was made to the MDC T, the messages were ZANU PF sponsored and intended to disparage, de-campaign and discredit the opposition candidate in all forms. The rules of accreditation that had been relaxed in the pre-era were reversed with severe restrictions on accreditation of both local and international observers. Against these findings, it is recommended that:

- Ideally, before the next elections in Zimbabwe, more broadcasters [independent radio and television stations] should be allowed to start operating so that the public can receive a greater diversity of information and viewpoints.
- Public broadcasters should also be obliged to “afford all political parties and independent candidates such free access to their broadcasting services as may be prescribed” in the regulations.
- The regulations must provide for the total time allocated to each political party or candidate, the duration of each broadcast by the party or candidate, and the times when the areas to which such broadcasts are to be transmitted.
- The Commission should be more proactive in its monitoring of broadcasters during the election period to ensure that they observe these provisions.
- The Print media should not promote political parties or candidates that encourage violence or hatred against any class of persons in Zimbabwe
- That the print media should avoid in their reports language encouraging racial, ethnic or religious prejudice or hatred or inciting violence or likely to lead to undue public contempt towards any political party, candidate or class of persons in Zimbabwe.

Polling Day

The Polling Day was characterized by poor voter turnout in urban areas, an extraordinarily high number of spoilt ballots [39 975 in the March Election against 131 481 in the June Election] with a significant number reportedly carrying insulting messages, an unusually high number of assisted voters, and recording of serial numbers- incidents that point to a banal breach of voter rights and secrecy.

In most rural constituencies, voters were reportedly herded to polling stations by traditional leaders and allegedly instructed to vote for the ruling party candidate. They were also ordered to record their ballot papers’ serial numbers and would after polling give them to the local leaders. Soldiers and police presence was reportedly heavy, in some cases their presence overshadowing that of voters.

Postal Voting

Postal voting in Zimbabwe has also remained controversial, shrouded in secrecy, inaccessible to observers, riddled with allegations of intimidation, malpractice and non-transparency. In the run-off, members of the security forces such as police, the army and prison officers reportedly voted in the presence, and under the directions of Commanding Officers who instructed their juniors to vote for the ZANU PF candidate or risk losing their jobs. This practice constitutes a banal breach to the basic principles that underpin electoral practices. It is strongly recommended that the doctrine of secrecy that is applied to other electoral processes must also apply to postal voting.

Conflict Management

The jurisdiction of the Electoral Court is restricted to the hearing of appeals and petitions under the Electoral Act. The Act requires the Court to determine election petitions within six months of the date of its presentation. Over the years, the Electoral Act has not been able to clear pre and post election disputes within the very tight time frame stipulated. In future, to enable the Electoral Court to resolve disputes expeditiously before the election takes place there is need for a competent, effective, independent and impartial Judiciary and electoral institutions. There is also need to complement the judges of the Electoral Court with staff, equipment and adequate resources. The Court should be given jurisdiction to resolve disputes before the election has taken place.

Electoral Stakeholders

Political Parties

Towards run off, the holding of rallies was a preserve of the ruling ZANU-PF, whilst the MDC-T political rallies were reportedly systematically disrupted by the ZANU PF militia and youth, mostly with the police as passive witnesses. Hate speech, incitement of violence, and threats of war characterized electoral campaigns-with the ruling party presidential candidate threatening to go back to war if he lost the election to the MDC presidential candidate, whom he considered a puppet of the West. As a result, the 27 June poll, which was supposed to be a run-off, turned out to be a one-horse race after the withdrawal of the MDC presidential candidate on 22 June citing escalating state-sponsored violence against his supporters. Given these observations, it is recommended that:

- Political parties must walk the talk of political tolerance. The message of zero tolerance to political violence must cascade from the top leadership structures to the grassroots with the political leaders particularly exhorted to publicly denounce political violence in both words and action.
- For the sake of national social healing those who were involved in the perpetration of violence must be investigated and the law enforced without any interference from the two main political parties.
- All political parties, the electronic and print media must be barred from using inflammatory language and hate speech. The Electoral Laws Amendment Act 2008 [Section 133A] which specifies electoral offences and the SADC Principles and Guidelines Governing Democratic Elections must be enforced with vigour, culprits facing disqualification or huge fines.
- To boost political tolerance, political parties are urged to practice effective internal democracy such that intra party violence that poses the greatest threat to the conduct of elections can be reduced if not avoided. They should abstain from imposing candidates.
- Political parties should also desist from imposing candidates, vote buying and manipulating state functions and resources for political gain. They should abstain from vote buying or any other dishonest or unethical election campaign conduct.

Election Observation

While under the new provisions of the Electoral Laws Amendment Act 2008, observers are accredited through the Electoral Commission's Observation Accreditation Committee and not the Ministry of Foreign Affairs [as previously was the case], it is instructive to note that the Committee cannot accredit a person if the Foreign Minister objects to such person observing the election which in essence means that the law gives veto powers to the Minister. ZEC is therefore not responsible for determining which groups to accredit. Rather, the Minister for Justice, Parliamentary and Legal Affairs and the Minister of Foreign Affairs respectively first approve applications by domestic and international organizations. This has shortchanged many credible international organizations that are signatories to Declaration of Principles for International Observers. Further, the fact that accreditation was only conducted in Harare and Bulawayo, placed greater hardships on individuals who wanted to serve the people of Zimbabwe by being a non-partisan election observer.

Local observers were required to apply for an invitation from the Minister of Justice before seeking accreditation. Up to 11 June, only international and regional observers and the media had been accredited. Limits were placed on the number of people that ZESN could field to the ministry for accreditation, the number effectively reduced from over 8667 in the harmonized election to 500 in the presidential run –off, a development that posed a serious risk to the ability of civil society to monitor and observe elections in order to identify anomalies in the electoral process especially on polling day. Late invitations of civil society organizations also had a negative impact on the invitation of observers, their accreditation and deployment. Equally disturbing was ZEC's decision to scale down the numbers of local observers that were placed by the Minister of Justice Legal and Parliamentary Affairs was a disturbing development. Also questionable was why the accreditation of foreign observer missions was extended while the same privilege was denied to local observers. As a result ZESN did not field any accredited observers for the run off. Since ZEC had published polling stations in excess of 9231, this warranted more observers. To improve election observation, it is recommended that the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission have the decisive say on which observers to accredit without any ministerial veto power as is currently the case, decentralize to districts, easy way of accreditation, and sponsoring the security of NGOs and human rights defenders. The Electoral Commission must also accredit sufficient numbers of local and international observers to allow comprehensive observation of elections. This function should lie solely in the hands of the ZEC and should be done without any cherry-picking of observers. The security of independent and domestic election observers must be guaranteed.

NGOs and Human Rights Defenders

Human Rights NGOs also bore the brunt of retributive violence. There was widespread harassment of observers, human rights lawyers, journalists and others who were thought to be either sympathetic to the opposition or did not give adequate coverage to the ruling party. Civil society and the work they do should be accorded more respect as it is important for democratic principles to take root in Zimbabwe. Attacks on civil society organizations in Zimbabwe should be condemned as they are a violation of the right of Zimbabweans to have a voice.

Security Forces

Reports of police, army and prison officers playing partisan roles recur throughout the ten provinces. Cases where acts of violence have been committed either directly by state services or in their full view have also been fully documented. The police in line with their mandates of impartial application of law must act swiftly and decisively in dealing with the perpetrators in accordance with the law. It is therefore recommended that:

- Security forces should conduct themselves in a professional and non-partisan manner and should not serve the interests of individual political parties. The police, army, prison officers and CIOs must not be political or partisan as this would interfere with their law enforcement mandates.

- Security forces should still conduct themselves in a professional and non-partisan manner and should not serve the interests of individual political parties.
- Although the presence of police officers at polling stations is to maintain order, ZESN is concerned that the deployment of large numbers of security forces at polling stations could lead to voter intimidation.

Traditional Leaders

The role of traditional leadership in the politics of Zimbabwe remains a highly contested terrain. There were widespread reports of the involvement of traditional leaders in political campaigns, campaigning for ZANU PF, threatening known or suspected opposition supporters with eviction from their fiefdoms, ordering opposition supporters facing threats of eviction to pay a fine of an ox in order to be forgiven. Such practices are in breach of their traditional god-fatherly role in their communities. It is therefore recommended that traditional leaders remain apolitical and should embrace all their subjects regardless of their political persuasion. They should allow their subjects to exercise their freedom of choice and association. They should not align with any political party.

Diaspora Voters

The Electoral Act currently restricts postal voting to disciplined force members and electoral officers who will be absent from their constituencies on electoral duties, Government officials who are absent from the country on Government service, and spouses of such persons. It is recommended that the Electoral Commission should be given the power to establish a system that allows Zimbabweans living outside the country [diaspora] to vote by post if they are unable to return to Zimbabwe to cast their votes.

Assisted Voters

While the Electoral Law Amendment 2008 stipulates that illiterate and physically handicapped voters should be assisted to vote by two electoral officers or employees of the Commission, rather than by the presiding officer of the polling station in the presence of a policeman [as was previously provided by the Act], these provisions have however also been affected by the Presidential Powers [Temporary Measures Amendment of Electoral Act] Regulations 2008 which stipulates that that illiterate or handicapped voters will be assisted by the presiding officer in the presence of two other electoral officers and a police officer on duty. It is recommended that the law should go further and require the Commission to disclose the total number of ballot printed for each election. Only a trusted friend or relative to safeguard the secrecy of their ballot and avoid intimidation should assist assisted voters. In the 27 June Elections, reports of literate people being assisted to vote were widespread. There is therefore need to ensure that this abuse is immediately stopped.

Conclusion

The fact that the 27 June presidential run-off has come and gone without effectively resolving the political impasse in the country raises fundamental questions about the way forward. The question is particularly pertinent given that the country has been running since March with no formal government in place at a time when hard decisions are desperately needed to bail out the country from its socioeconomic meltdown.

The two political parties engage in a dialogue in order to find a lasting solution to the political impasse. Such a dialogue should however be guided by the “will of the people” as anything short of that constitutes a truce and not a permanent settlement. There is no substitute for negotiations. Lessons must be drawn from power-sharing experiences in other countries, the most recent being the Kenyan case. Experiences must also be drawn from Zimbabwe’s first Government of Unity as well as the Government of Unity following the 1987 Unity Accord.

While disagreement over the outcome of the elections rages on realities on the ground compel the incumbent and the MDC leader to urgently engage each other or call for a fresh election under a conducive environment and conditions that guarantee respect of the will of the people. It is time for hard talk. However, promising as it is, the power sharing route is no stroll in a garden park. Finding a solution to the Zimbabwe crisis is not going to be easy given the tangent stance of the main political actors. How far each of them is prepared to climb down and how far the mediator will slowly nudge them from their positions, will be decisive in determining either the collapse or the success of the negotiations.

The fact that these negotiations are a follow-up to the 29 March and 27 June Elections makes the negotiation process even more protracted and delicate as it is imperative for negotiators to agree on what basis power sharing is based. Is it based on the 27 June poll or 29 March poll results? This question is particularly burning given that both contenders have hard-line positions on this sticky issue. How the mediator will handle this tricky question without shortchanging the will of the people will prove a test case of his mediation management capacity. It is also imperative to agree on who will head the proposed power sharing. Is the nation heading for an MDC or ZANU PF-headed Government? Who will wield executive/ceremonial powers? How are ministerial responsibilities to be shared? These questions are particularly tricky given the ideological and personality differences and mistrust between the two main political actors.
